"Constitution should view Catalonia as nationality"

The Catalan president urges Andalusia not to adopt an attitude of denying its uniqueness

AGENCIES / ALEXLEFF

Catalan president Pasqual Maragall urged a conference audience at El Escorial in Madrid yesterday to consider the importance of "nationality" in the constitution. Speaking at the Universidad Complutense in a summer course titled Nationalism in the 21st century, he said for Catalonia it would be "disappointing" if the constitution should not preserve that precise term which denotes the peoples of Spain.

Maragall confessed that the timing of the autonomous statute reforms raises "some problems," though they were not "irresolvable." It would be a lot to ask, he explained, for Catalans to simply back down on the issue of constitutional revision when it is something which Catalans feel so strongly about. In his view, obstacles could be overcome if the state would adopt an "interim" statute of autonomy. The president also raised the possibility of the Catalan parliament using its power to propose a reform to the Spanish constitution. In any case, Maragall insists on his unrelenting trust of the Spanish prime minister, José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero, saying that he is "a man of his word."

During a conference called Diverse Spain and obstinate Catalonia. Catalonia in the Spanish political context, Maragall made a specific appeal to Andalusia. The southern territory should have a pivotal role in the reforms process which is about to get under way, he said, adding that it will be highly influential in designing, what he called a "customised suit" to fit a pluralistic Spain.

In Maragall's opinion, Andalusia will find itself in a dilemma: whether to seek recognition for its uniqueness or to conform to the general attitude that denies all differences. The second option would be the easiest one, he noted, considering the fact that if Andalusia were to deny its own particularity it would be applauded by the rest of the territories, with a few exceptions. However, as head of the Catalan Socialist Party Maragall appealed to Andalusian socialist president Manuel Chaves, claiming that the southern territory would be making a "big mistake" by giving in to conformity. He would be denying "reality," Maragall said. "It has to do with designing the rules of the game, excluding all privilege, not erasing the real existing distinctions so that it becomes clear that there is no privilege." Maragall pointed at Andalusia's "robust and singular culture," which in his view is worthy of a push for the distinction of nationalities that make up Spain.

The Catalan president denotes the insistance upon an "untouchable" constitution as an Aznarian condition, referring to the former Spanish prime minister José María Aznar. Certain PP notables are already showing signs of recovery, including the party's secretary-Maragall made a poignant suggestion general Mariano Rajoy and the mayor of Madrid Alberto Ruiz-Gallardón, both seeming more and more open to constitutional change.

Catalonia does not overlook the circumstances in the rest of Spain. Maragall said at El Escorial. Catalan socialists will not back down "until achieving a pluralistic Spain where its diversity is reconciled," he said.

Report reveals more women in the job market in Catalonia than the rest of Spain and Europe alan job market than either in Spain as a whole or Europe. Figures released by the Department of Work show that of all females of working age in Catalonia, 64.5% are an active part of the labour force. Women between the ages of 25 and 44 show the highest level of activity, which reveals the importance of education as these are also the women with the highest level of training. Catalan and Europe with a job occupation discrimination can be seen in salar-More women are active in the Cat-rate (the proportion of the active ies where a woman's average wage is population in employment) of 56%.

Despite the positive figures, the director general of Relacions Laborals, Mar Serna claimed, "the situation of women is still unsatisfactory." She was referring to the gap that separates the situation of women from that of men. Fewer men in Catalonia are unemployed (7%) but of those in work almost 80% have permanent contracts compared with women also compare well to Spain 75% of women. However, the worst

Such differences based on sexual discrimination are reflected in collective agreements. Only 9% of such agreements contain clauses to promote the equality of opportunity for women. Mar Serna explained yesterday that she would give priority when handing out subsidies for industrial development to those companies that put into practice policies that promote sexual equality.

Museu Marítim searching for people born in Barcelona on 15

The exhibition Titanic, which is running at The Museu Marítim until 10 October, is trying to locate people born in the province of Barcelona on 15 April 1912, the date when the mythical ship Titanic sank and at the same time the day when all the 705 survivors of the tragedy were born again. The organisers of the exhibition are trying to find all the people born on 15 April 1912 in Barcelona to invite them to an event where they will be given souvenirs from the Titanic as well as a free meal —the same menuthat was served on the legendary ship in the first-class restaurant on April 1912, when the Titanic sank after running into an iceberg. In spite of the extraordinary efforts of the media from the cities that hosted the exhibition, only two people showed up for the homage. The two 92-year-old women are from Zamora and San Sebastián and they received a homage from the local authorities and the organising team of Titanic Exhibition. The Museu Marítim is still looking for people born on 15 April 1912 and asks everyone who can provide information on the subject to call 933 429920 or 652908082.

The director of Unesco expresses his solidarity for Forum Monterrey

The managing director of Unesco, Koichiro Matsuura, expressed yesterda his full solidarity for the next celebration of the Universal Forum of Cultures, due to take place in the Mexican City of Monterrey in 2007. Yesterdy Matsuura received at the headquarters of Unesco in Paris the governor of the Mexican state Nuevo León, José Natividad González Paras, officials of the Mexican and Spanish governments, as well as the Forum's head of administration, Jaume Pagés, who officially announced to him that Monterrey has been chosen as the next city to host the international cultural event. According to representatives of the Catalan delegation, Unesco will collaborate with the Monterrey organisation in choosing the main topics and cultural activities for the next Forum. The event will cost 200 million dollars, 90 of which will be provided by the Federal Government, while the rest will be divided between the Government of Nueva Leon, the Monterrey City Council and private sponsors. A million visitors are expected to visit the next Forum, according to the Governor, who also mentioned that the event will place emphasis on content, as well as national and international diffusion. The Monterrey organisational commitee will start work on Forum 2007 after having obtained the final endorsement from Unesco's Executive Council in 2005.

A lesson for Asia from Catalonia

An Indian's view of Barcelona's inspiring journey from revolution and defeat to harmony and cultural pride

Where borders are broken and cultural difference is treasured, Sunanda K. Datta-Ray's finds an instructive model for his homeland to follow. This article was contributed to "Catalonia Today" by "The Telegraph" in Calcutta, India arcelona football club's campaign for the Catalan language is one more reason why homage should be paid to Catalonia not only for its indomitable courage in the past. The present is equally inspiring. Although democratic socialism was wiped out in blood in the civil war that broke out this month 68 years ago, the argument of whether a multicultural country is a state of many nations or a nation of many states has been resolved here in harmony.

That achievement outweighs the failure that darkened a generation's horizon. "It was in Spain that men learned that one can be right and yet be beaten," Camus wrote, "that force can vanquish spirit, that there are times when courage is not its own recompense. It is this, doubtless, which explains why so many men, the world over, regard the Spanish drama as a personal tragedy." True, perhaps, but Spain also promises new life to thousands of Indians, Pakistanis and Bangladeshis. Friends on the La Vanguardia newspaper in Barcelona, one of Spain's oldest, suggest the city might have as many as 200,000 south Asians.

Barcelona has endured what Calcutta's fashionable parlour pinks degraded to self-serving rhetoric. It is a city that lived revolution, suffered war, experienced hardship and practiced brotherhood. "One had breathed the air of equality," George Orwell wrote as a volunteer fighter against fascism.

"THERE ARE NO PYRENEES"

Today, it is the centre of a proud region that blazes another trail. Driving from Portvendres in France to Portbou in Spain or taking the train from Figueres in Spain to Cervera in France has even greater relevance for Asia's fractured unity. The vision behind the comment, "Henceforth there are no Pyrenees," apocryphally attributed to Louis XIV when his grandson's assumption of the Spanish crown plunged Europe into war, has at last been realised. Customs and immigration checks have vanished; so has duty-free shopping. The seamless robe of European unity holds the message that the dream of Charlemagne and Napoleon can be realised without violence.

Intrigued by the scimitar nose of the only other occupant of the hotel lift in Tarragona, an elderly man with snow-white hair and rose-pink cheeks, I asked if he was Spanish. "Catalan," he replied, reminding me of an encounter in Kiev airport as twilight descended on the old Soviet Union. The man next to me wanted to buy the elastic-sided English boots I was wearing. Was he Russian? No, Ukrainian. Placing both his hands together, palms downwards, on the left, he said "Ukrainian!" and repeated the same gesture on the right, saying "Russian!" I gathered he meant that they were two different peoples living side by side.

MAKING THE COUNTRY

The nose could have been a relic of the Romans, whose splendid ruins dominate Tarragona, of Moorish conquerors who were not finally driven out till the 13th century or of the 70,000 Moroccan and Algerian soldiers General Francisco Franco imported to crush the elected republic. Tourist literature calls Catalonia "a European country" of 31,980 sq km and six million inhabitants. Oriol Servià, a local racing driver, participates in international events as a Catalan, not a Spaniard, and sports Catalonia's red and yellow stripes. Barcelona FC's slogan, "Fent país", means Making the Country. "We are not trying to be political," says the club president, Joan Laporta, "our aim is to simply make a country, to stand up for the countrys right. Hence the slogan.'

But the Esquerra Republicana de Catalunya is political. It has threatened to oppose the European constitution, which will be submitted to a referendum, unless the European Union explicitly addresses Catalonia's social, economic, democratic and environmental concerns. The party chief, Josep-Lluís Carod-Rovira, wants a meeting with the president to discuss terms. Gazing into the crystal ball of the future, will the leaders of Kashmir, Tibet, Tamil Eeelam, the Shan, Kachin and Karen states, Aceh and Moro — or any other restive Asian minority with a territorial definition — ever be able to stake a similar claim? Rebels or nationalists, these groups have each proclaimed a version of Catalonia's Statute of Autonomy. Each is clamouring for some form of autodeterminació. Each awaits its own ruptura pactada — pragmatic arrangement with central authority.

The Asian nation that comes most vividly to mind in Barcelona is

Pakistanis in the Raval (Barcelona) watching an India-Pakistan cricket match / LLUÍS CRUSET

Bangladesh, and not merely because of its physical presence along the broad road called Passeig de Gràcia, where jaunty lads from Barisal and Faridpur sell scarves, belts and sunglasses under the shadow of Antoni Gaudi's architectural fantasies. My instant rapport with them evokes Catalonia's linguistic ties with Valencia, the Balearic Islands and France's Roussillon district. The Catalan language was banned, first by the Bourbons in 1714 and then by Franco in 1936. Oblivious of historical similarities with the nation that has given them refuge, the boys urge me to stay on, laughing aloud when I plead a 50-day visa. Their own visas expired many months ago. Some never had one. Their families sold everything to raise enough money to send them to Morocco from where they made their way to Spain. One youth who spent a month in an island jail — he knows it only as mahasagarey dweep—speaks warmly of the Spanish police for helping his rehabilitation. They have promised him his "papers".

A more canny spirit dominates the Rambles, the wide promenade that sweeps down from the mountains to the sea and is Barcelonas main artery, where loudspeakers once bellowed revolutionary songs night and day. The Rambles is now crowded with cafés, kiosks, jugglers and entertainers. Its pavements are lined by souvenir shops whose street-smart Indian owners sell 52cent stamps (needed for postcards within Europe) for 60 cents. Who sponsored me, asked one youth only to be answered by a colleague, "He doesn't have to be sponsored. He can get a visa. Can't you see he's aged?"

ACOUNTRY OF ROBUST OPPORTUNITY AT A HIGHER LEVEL

They, too, have no knowledge of history, but their Spain is not somewhere to get lost in. For Indians, it is a country of robust opportunity at a higher level. I remember the embarrassment of my old friend, Pilu Roy Chowdhury of Santosh, for many years Spain's honourary consul in Calcutta, over reports of coal and old Centurion tanks being exported from India to apartheid South Africa with misleading end-user certificates from rich Indians in Spain. Even the Pakistani selling roses as we dined off the Ronda Sant Pere feels comfortable in Barcelona. Catalans might traditionally resent the xarnego, as migrants from other parts of Spain are called, and "Negroes, No" was scrawled in a telephone kiosk. But south Asians don't stand out physically as in Britain, and that is a major step towards integration.

Is the Catalanism that so easily accepts foreigners a matter of race, residence, culture or a mix of all three? Is a Malaysian boomiputra (literally son of the soil, borrowed from the country's Hindu past) born or created? Most are indisputably ethnic Malays, but Muslim settlers who subscribe to Malay culture and values, which have never been defined,

Spain promises new life to thousands of Indians, Pakistanis and Bangladeshis also qualify for inclusion. Such flexibility saves a nations soul from atrophy.

Of the many manifestations of Catalan assertiveness, the most poignant for Asia lies in a memorandum to King Alfonso XII promising not to weaken or attack "the glorious unity of the Spanish fatherland," but also warning against trying "to stifle and destroy regional life in order to substitute that of the centre." Stumbling on the Pyrenees of the mind as a Spaniard takes over as president of the European parliament with its 732 members representing 25 coun $tries and 20 \, languages, Asians \, have \, to$ remember that although they gave Europe algebra and gunpowder, Europe leads the world in political evolution. Its recent history confirms that regionalism reinforces larger unity. Visiting the shrine in Figueres of one of Catalonia's most distinguished sons, albeit a fanatical Franco supporter, I read the message of Salvador Dalí's melting clocks, "Time is fluid, not rigid." So are constitutions that survive with strength.

Republican trench from Battle of the Ebre to be opened to the public

Archaeologists recover key site from decisive Civil War battle

NATÀLIA BORBONES/NEIL STOKES

A trench dating back to the Spanish Civil War is to be opened to the public this autumn. During the decisive Battle of the Ebre in 1938, republican forces dug trenches as part of their defence of la Fatarella before being overrun by rebels on 7 or 8 November. The present archaeological work by the Consorci Memorial dels Espais de la Batalla de l'Ebre (Comebe) has recovered a 50 metre stretch of this trench system that includes two shelters, both with two entrances each. Although the trench is located on private land, the owner has ceded the use and management of the terrain to Comebe.

Helped by the work of a group of archaeologists, the trench is in an excellent state of conservation, despite 66 years of erosion which has reduced its height from 150 centimetres to just over half a metre. It is believed that some ten soldiers and a corporal were billeted in the trench. Objects found during the dig include bullets, hazelnuts and rusty tins. In one of the refuges that served to protect the soldiers from air raids can be seen a small fireplace.

The recovery project, costing nearly 12,000 euros, is a pioneering excavation in sites related to the Spanish Civil War. "In fact, we are treating it as an experiment," comments Isabel Moreno, the conservationist for the dig. On 16 November, the restoration of the trench is set to be completed, allowing the unveiling of one of the most important sites from the Battle of the Ebre open to the public. The director of Comebe projects, David Tormo, explains that the restoration work "will enable the public to know how the soldiers lived here for four months, and visualise the territory of Terra Alta where the communication and provisioning lines for the republican army were managed."

Also on 16 November, full of symbolism for being the day the Battle of the Ebre finished, Comebe have planned to open Les Veus del Front (Voices from the Front) in their Pinell de Brai centre. This exhibition will explain the role of the press and propoganda in the Battle of the Ebre

The last great offensive of the Spanish Civil War

The Battle of the Ebre was the last great battle of the Spanish Civil War. By 1938 the republican forces were running into trouble and in order to relieve pressure on Catalonia and Valencia from the advancing nationalist troops, the Spanish prime minister approved a full-scale offensive across the river Ebre. The republican attack began on July 25, 1938 and was initially succesful. However, the nationalists, with their superior air power, forced the republicans back. Fighting resembled World War I with both sides launching full-frontal $attacks \, on \, entrenched \, positions \, with \, little \, success \, and \, great$ loss of life. It was, in fact, the last time the International Brigades made up of foreign volunteers were used before they were withdrawn after a couple of months. By November, the nationalist firepower was impossible to resist any longer and the republicans, with 100,000 soldiers out of action and with the loss of most of their equipment, were forced back. The republic were effectively finished as a fighting force.

Car bomb south of Baghdad kills nine, US helicopter shot down

Guerrillas detonate a car bomb outside a police station in Mahawil

AGENCIES

Guerrillas detonated a car bomb outside a police station in a town south of Baghdad yesterday, killing nine people in the latest attack targeting Iraq's fledgling security forces. In a day that saw heavy fighting in the Shi'ite holy city of Najaf, fighters loyal to Moqtada al-Sadr also shot down a US helicopter.

The car bomb attack in Mahawil, about 75 kilometres south of Baghdad, wounded at least 24 people, Iraq's health ministry said. Five of those who died belonged to the Iraqi police force, while four were insurgents battling the newly-formed bah Kadhim said three masked gunmen opened fire on the police station in the town, about 40 miles south of Baghdad, and then fled. A bomb in a minibus then exploded outside the building. A US military statement said the police station was attacked by "a significant number of aggressors" believed to be members of the militia. The statement said the attackers used heavy machine guns, rocket-propelled grenades, mortars and small arms in an assault on the police station.

"Iraqi national guardsmen quickly reinforced Iraqi police, and the two units successfully defended the station from the attackers. Upon arrival of the marines, Mehdi Army members withdrew into the city's exclusion zone," the military said. "The attack is an overt violation of the ceasefire agreement reached in June between coalition forces and Moqtada Sadr." But Sheikh Mahmoud al-Sudani, a spokesman for Sadr, said US forces and Iraqi police had attacked first, and that the cleric had ordered his militiamen not to fight back. Sadr launched an uprising against US-led forces in April, and hundreds were killed in weeks of fighting in Shi'ite areas of Iraq.

A US military spokesman said the crew of the downed helicopter were wounded and evacuated. Sadr's aides said the cleric's Mehdi Army militia had shot down the aircraft.

Singapore warned that the Jemaah Islamiah group, linked to the al Qaeda network of Osama bin Laden, was plotting new attacks in Southeast Asia and may be activating dormant agents or cells. In Jakarta, the head of the anti-terror coordinating board at the office of Indonesia's chief security minister, said dozens of arrests had depleted militant ranks but small cells were still training for attacks in the world's most populous Muslim nation. Last month, Malaysia's police intelligence chief also said he believed Jemaah Islamiah leaders were regrouping and planning more attacks.

Kerry uses the price of crude oil as an electoral campaign weapon

Kerry argues bringing oil purchasing for the reserve to a halt will reduce oil prices worldwide

MICHAEL BUNN

Record high crude oil prices have once again taken centre stage in the United States presidential election campaign, leading to an exchange of accusations and counteraccusations between Republicans and Democrats on how to deal with the historic price rise.

The use of US strategic oil reserves has become one of the Democrats' main lines of attack in the campaign for the 2 November elections, which is still a very evenlymatched race. John Kerry, the Democrat candidate, is using oil and petrol prices to support his claim that the government is not paying attention to the economic hardship of much of the US population. Kerry has thus appealed to the Bush administration to stop filling up the strategic oil reserves, arguing that a reduced demand would bring down the record price of crude oil on the international market.

Speaking in Davenport (Iowa) on Wednesday, Kerry presented a series of measures to relaunch economic growth, saying that stopping oil purchasing for the reserve would

Aids drugs curb HIV epidemic

The spread of the HIV virus is reduced by giving infected people drugs meant to treat Aids, according to Tawainese research. Since 1997 Taiwan began providing efficient anti-retroviral drugs free of charge, halving the infection rate and showing that the drugs can reduce transmission of the virus, say the researchers. Although studies show that anti-retroviral drugs keep HIV positive carriers alive, the issue of whether they actually stop transmission of the virus has been hotly debated. The new study appears to suggest that they do. Experts are now urging that these drugs be made available to developing countries as soon as possible.

A massive locust swarm has swept into the Mauritanian capital Nouakchott, devouring trees, bushes and parts of the city's main soccer field, residents said. The city's inhabitants lit fires and rattled tin boxes filled with stones to try to chase away the insects, which are swarming down from North Africa and threaten to unleash the region's worst locust crisis for 15 years.

European Central Bank keeps rates steady at 2 per cent despite oil surge

Economists say tightened credit is due to fear of high energy prices or a slowdown in trade

REUTERS, FRANKFURT

The European Central Bank left interest rates unchanged at 2.00 per cent as expected yesterday, giving the euro zone economic recovery time to build even as surging oil prices boost inflation.

Economists say the ECB is reluctant to tighten credit until it is sure that a return of domestic demand, needed to sustain a fully-fledged recovery, will not be tripped up by high energy prices or a slowdown in the euro zone's main trading partners. Most analysts see the ECB keeping interest rates at current record low levels through into 2005. "Economic growth remains weak and inflation appears moderate," said Ulrich Beckmann, an economist at Deutsche Bank in Frankfurt, adding that oil prices had not yet fed through to unit labour costs. The ECB did not hold its usual news conference following yesterday's Governing Council discussion, which was held by telephone conference before policymakers take a fourweek summer break.

Oil prices hit record highs this week due to surging worldwide demand and concerns about supply from key producers in the Middle East, Russia and Venezuela. Energy costs are keeping upward pressure on euro zone inflation, which was an annual 2.4 per cent in July, the same as in June and only just below May's 2.5 per cent rate. The ECB aims to keep inflation below, but close to 2.0 per cent.

Santander bank eyes London listing to pump up its Abbey offer while HBOS considers bid Spanish bank Santander Central Hispano (SCH), which has agreed an 8.14 billion pound (12.3bn euro) terday, according to news agency reports. "They are working on it," said a source close to the bank in Madrid. The Financial Times reported on its web site yesterday that Santander was understood to be prepared to have a secondary listing in London if there was enough demand from Abbey shareholders. According to the leading business daily, it is rare for companies to list in London as a directly after a takeover bid for a UK ment on the report.

The Spanish group has already said it will pay dividends to Abbey's retail investors in sterling and will sest up free dealing facilities at Abbey offices to make it possible for shareholders to sell out.

Shares in Abbey closed at 575.5 pounds on Wednesday, on hopes that a counterbid might occur. Earlier this week, HBOS, the UK's fourth largest bank, said it was considering a counterbid for Abbey, although it cautioned that no decision had been made. The HBOS offer poses a major competitive threat to Santander, but also to world bankmean a consolidation of a th the British mortgage market.

It said on Wednesday it was in advanced negotiations to sell Abbey National France, its French mortgage business, to BNP Paribas, the French bank. UNITED KINGDOM

Bank of England rates up 4.75%

The ECB's steady stance contrasted with the Bank of England, which as expected yesterday raised rates by a quarter percentage point to 4.75 per cent, its fifth rise since November, to stem a consumer spending spree and roaring house prices. Analysts will now look to the ECB's next interest rate decision and news conference on 2 September when the central bank will have fresh forecasts for euro zone growth and inflation. "We are expecting a change of rhetoric from the ECB, with slightly more hawkish statements through the autumn but until we see a decisive turnaround in the labour market, which we don't see until the end of the year at least, we can't see the ECB being persuaded to raise rates," said James Nixon, an economist at $Barclays\,Capital\,in\,London.$

Mastercard moves over 14 bn

Users of the Mastercard credit cards dispensed by Spanish banks made transactions of a total of 14.25 billion euros in the first half of financial year 2004. The figure is 19.7 per cent higher than last year, the Mastercard group said. This increase kept Spain at a steady third in Europe for the number of card transactions, behind the UK and France. Also, the second-quarter figure surpassed the average rise in Europe, which was 13 per cent, and 10.3 per cent worldwide.

Oil casts doubts over high earnings

• Strong earnings from blue chips like Dutch insurer ING helped Europe's top stock indices end a touch higher on Thursday, but US crude oil prices back above $43 a barrel cast a shadow. Smith & Nephew shares also soured the mood, shedding 10 percent after the British medical device firm missed forecasts for second-quarter profits. Investors held their breath ahead of Friday's report on US employment in July, hoping for signs that US growth was sustainable, but at the same time were wary that stellar numbers may lead to further monetary tightening. The FTSE Eurotop 300 index of pan-European blue chips added 0.12 percent to end at 977.3 points, while the narrower DJ Euro Stoxx 50 index rose 0.19 percent to 2,689.3 points. Markets have been affected by fears about interest rates and oil prices in recent weeks.

ontrary to what is constantly indicated by the country's political and media establishment, the transition from dictatorship to democracy was not exemplary; in fact, the opposite is true. The huge dominance that conservative forces had in state structures explains the perpetuation of structural problems that have still not been resolved. For example, scant recognition in the Spanish constitution for a plurinational Spain, while the weaker left just had to accept this arrangement. And even more so, the historic silence over what the Republic, the Civil War and the dictatorship really was, has prevented the population from knowing what possible alternatives to our situation exist. Many younger people do not know, for instance, that the Republic accepted the distinctness of the Catalan and Basque nations within an institutional framework that was truly plurinational and upon which the new constitution should have been based, just as the left had proposed in their day.

This proposal was vetoed by the right and the successors of the rebellious army that continued to have a centralist, uniform vision of Spain. Alfonso Guerra in his memoir Cuando el tiempo nos alcanza (1940-1982) refers to the army's opposition to accepting the consensual proposals from the left that the new constitution be based on that of the 2nd Republic. Accepting that proposal would have meant recognising the illegitimacy of the military coup, something the army have never countenanced. Moreover, the fact that the army

1936, have never paid tribute to soldiers shot for expressing loyalty to the democratic Republican government, or to soldiers that were expelled from the armed forces because of their commitment to democracy and liberty during the dictatorship, are very worrying indicators that army considers itself as the natural inheritor of the forces of revolt. It was this army, along with the right, which never accep-have never condemned the armed revolt of ted the plurinationality of the Spanish state. From here came the famous chapter of the Magna Carta of 1978, which established that the aim of the self-governing states was to deny Catalan and Basque distinctions, creating the famous "coffee all round".

This is precisely the root of the so-called Spanish territorial problem, which could paradoxically lead to the disintegration of Spain. Not because of Basque or Catalan secession, but because each request for distinction on the part of Catalonia and the Basque Country is followed by an identical request from other autonomous communities that do not accept this distinction for regions in Spanish territory. The recovery of a sense of historical memory would help the understanding of the misnamed Civil War, which was in fact a class war. In Catalonia, as in most other parts of Spain, the majority of the middle classes, the Church and the army among others, supported the military revolt, while the working classes re-

In reality it is too often forgotten that most of the documents in the Salamanca archive are not papers confiscated from the Catalan government, but documents confiscated from unions and parties of the left from all over Spain. It is obvious that these stolen papers should be returned if the owning bodies so wish it. To accept their loss would be to indirectly legitimise the military revolt. Therefore the overwhelming need to recover the historic memory in all parts of Spain, including Castille, where thousands of Castilian workers were killed by the same ones who set up this archive. It makes no sense that the representatives of the popular classes should defend the right of conquest of those that oppressed their kind, using nationalist arguments that dilute the solidarity one expects from the left. This solidarity should not deny national plurality of the same popular class and accept that Catalonia, the Basque country and Galicia are distinct nations within Spain.

Democracy the only choice

here may only be one father and one mother in a family, but often there are quite a few children. Let's take a couple of kids who have reached that age when their appetite for going out has grown far beyond what is called common sense would advise. So, mother and father are forced to negotiate with them, which is something barely practicable: it's a conflict. First, there is the destabilising factor of the grandparthe radio-controlled torpedoes of other children's parents, the hydrogen bombs of what they see and hear on the television or in the street. Often when you're a parent and you want to remain firm in your opinion, you begin to think that you'd better get to like being called useless, an antique or a fascist. In our house we have decided to spread the categories around: the antique is my wife, I'm the fascist and the useless one isn't anybody because the rules ents, the discrete shrapnel of the of the game say that in a democracy, or where friends of your sons or daughters, any point of view is legitimate.

"What about if we vote on it?" suggested one of my daughters the other day. The old party lost. The two girls both voted "yes", I voted "no" and my wife, who was cleaning the kitchen, came in to vote once the ballot box had been closed. I know that cleaning the kitchen should have been something for the four of us to share. But that's the way it went. When the electoral campaign starts up again, who knows whether we'll elect someone to go and do it or whether well choose to leave it

The play tells the story of Claudious (Claudio, played by Héctor Alterio) a man living in ancient Rome, grandson of Emperior Augustus, during the decadent period of the Roman empire. Through a series of circumstances, he finds himself unexpectedly made emperor. In the play, Claudius is an old man who shares his memories of his life and family with the audience. The play was adapted from two historical novels by Graves, I, Claudius and Claudius the God. Both books were also used as the basis for a miniseries for television produced by the BBC. Most of the characters Graves presents were real and the Claudius works are known for their historical

Grammar

A Direct-object pronouns

Going back to the dialogue, look again to the sentences: Com les vols, grosses o petites? and els vols madurs o verds?, where les and els refers to a feminine plural object, the first and to a masculine plural, the last. Note that object pronouns can stand only in conjunction with a verb. As well as indicate plural (them), as above, and singular (it), they indicate gender. And finally remember that these words may vary its form according to their position with the verb and according to the spelling of the verb. Here we look at object pronouns placed before the verb:

verb beginning with consonant	masc. el	femin. la	masc. f	emin. les
verb beginning with vowel or h + vowel	ľ	ľ	els	les

Some more examples:

Vols el préssec ara o el vols després?

Do you want the peach now or do you want it latter? La carta? L'escric cada dia.

The letter? I write it every day.

B Spelling changes (g > gu), (j > g), (c > qu)

The changes of the kind seen in the parts of verb tancar (Lesson 7) also affect many feminine plural words. In the dialogue we find pastanagues, from a singular form pastanaga. Remember that the changes are made to reflect consistency of pronunciation. We also encounter ja >ges as in taronja > taronges and ca > ques as in fleca > fleques

Activities

1 Using the times (Lessons 6 and 7) answer the following questions. Here you have two examples:

A quina hora obren la fleca? (9 am)

Obren a les nou del matí.

Quin horari fan a l'estanc? (4pm-8pm) Obren de les quatre de la tarda a les vuit del vespre.

1-A quina hora obren la peixateria? (9.30 am)

2-A quina hora tanquen el supermercat? (8.45 pm) 3-Quin horari fan a la botiga? (10am-8pm)

4-A quina hora tanquen la fleca? (6pm)

5-Quin horari fan a la pastisseria? (9am-1.30pm) (5-8.30pm)

2 Put these words into plural:

botiga, pastisseria, all, mica, hora, estanc, mitja, poma

Key of the activity (30/07/04)

1 1 vols / vull / tenim / Teniu 2 presento / Vius / m'estic / Estudio / treballo 3 podem / tenim / puc / sóc 4 Parleu / parlem

Barcelona FC to play AC Milan in this year's Gamper trophy

Special pennants advertising the match will appear in many of the city's streets

MICHAEL BUNN

On Wednesday 25 August Barcelona football club will be playing their annual friendly match the Trofeu Joan Gamper, a competition in which the team plays a different top class international club in homage to the man who founded FC Barcelona. For this year's Trofeu Joan Gamper — the 39th — Nou Camp will be welcoming the Italian team AC Milan. Thus the pitch will be filled with stars such as Shevchenko, Kaká, Rui Costa and Cafu, as well as Barcelona's own stars, including Ronaldinho and Deco.

To celebrate the event, many streets in Barcelona will be decorated with special pennants, and an official poster has been produced, which gives all the details on the match. The celebrations begin at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when there will be activities designed to prepare the crowd for the match. Later on, at 8:45, there will be the presentation ceremony for all the players, and the organisation has promised some surprises here. After that comes the match itself, which will commence

The match will be sponsored by Barcelona beer company Estrella Damm, and at the end of last season there was a lot of discussion as to whether the Barcelona team — who until now have never worn shirts featuring sponsors emblems would finally succumb to the lure of marketing. However, President Joan Laporta has announced in China (where he is accompanying the team on their current Asian tour) that for the coming season, Barcelona will not be wearing shirts carrying any advertising. The president admitted that he had received several interesting offers from possible sponsors, but that they had finally been rejected. Meanwhile, a deal by which a "Barcelona" building is being constructed in Shanghai is now underway, and this project will bring the club considerable revenue. Laporta said "we are talking about figures similar to the income from sponsoring the Barça shirts, and the important thing is to bring in as much money as possible so as to be able to invest in Barcelona's sporting future". Thus the Barcelona players will continue to where shirts "unspoiled" by marketing, continuing the tradition of the club.

This is the 39th annual Gamper Trophy, a friendly match against an international club

How to buy yourticketsto the Gamper

All those who are interested in seeing Ronaldinho and company play the satrs of AC Milan should go to www.servicaixa.com, from where they should follow the directions to the Gamper trophy page. The first page which sells tickets is for club members only, but if you click on "continuar" you will be redirected to the next page, which offers you the chance to choose your ticket price (30, 40 or 60 euros each) followed by a graphic which allows you to choose the section of the stadium you want to buy a ticket for.

Athens Games hit by first sports controversy as female tennis players call for boycott
