ENO invited to perform at next year's Festival de Peralada

The Festival Castell de Peralada has unveiled its programme for next year after wrapping up this year's successful event which attracted 30,000 spectators to the grounds of the castle in the Alt Empordà. Among those invited to perform next year are the English National Ballet. The organisers said they would also like to stage a performance of the opera Tosca. The sellout show this year was Woody Allen's New Orleans jazz concert, with performances by Paco de Lucía and Bebo Valdés not far behind.

Spanish banks report net profits up 28% to 4.1bn euros

Spanish banks registered net profits of 4.1 billion euros for the first half of the year, which represents an increase of 28.4 per cent over the same period in 2003. The positive results are due to mainly to an increase in investment credit, cost control and a fall in demand for insolvency resources. The results were also boosted by the weakness of the dollar and Latin American currencies relative to the euro. Profits by the two Spanish giants BBAA and Grupo Santander, represented 79 per cent of the industry total./ Full story page 9

Barcelona food fair to open doors to public with tasting samples

Alimentaria Exhibitions is to launch a trade show at the Fira offering workshops and degustació

"Look but don't touch" is often the law of the land in trade shows, limiting visitors to the bounds of negotiation, which can be boring for anyone not directly involved in the sector. But when it comes to food fairs, if stands refuse, or are not allowed, to offer tasting samples, hungry participants are left with frustration and grumbling stomaches. The food fair group Alimentaria Exhibitions plans to keep show-goers in Barcelona content with the launch of a new fair that will be open to the public, and open to tasting as well.

"There is a world of interest in the food industry and Alimentaria management cannot ignore that," Alimentaria Exhibitions general manager Francisco Carrió told reporters yesterday. The organisers of the food company, a conglomerate of Reed Exhibitions Iberia and Fira Barcelona, intend to present a trade show on food with a portion dedicated to products, available to the delight of the public.

There will also be a more entertaining side of the fair, including talks on cooking, getting to know ethnic cuisine produce and kichen workshops. The show is meant to be a type of urban forum, according to Carrió, aiming to approach the cit-before," he says.

Organisers expect to open doors by the end of next year in the Montjuïc 1 expo centre. Alimentaria 2004 put on a trade show in Barce-

Kidnap victim freed by police after a four-day ordeal at the hands of two men in a Girona flat

AGENCIES/RICHARD MCCRANN

Two men who had kidnapped a young American man and held him hostage had demanded 100,000 euros for his release, according to the police. The man was kidnapped last week and held in a flat for four days in Girona before being rescued by the police. The police confirmed that during the man's ordeal, the two kidnappers had demanded money from the father of the boy, a businessman living in Madrid, who owns Techologias Inc. After the boy was released he was taken to the Josep Trueta hospital in Girona suffering from cuts and bruises and a wound to his hands where the kidnappers had placed chains.

The police confirmed that the kidnappers had worked previously in a factory belonging to the father of the kidnapped boy. The police said the two Moroccan kidnappers, one aged 49, who lived in Lleida,

"In the city he made contact with one of the kidnappers who gave him some type of sleeping pill. From that moment on he cannot remember anything until he was in the flat in Girona," said the police. They confirmed that the young boy had then spoken to his father by telephone saying he had been kidnapped and that the father had to pay 100,000 euros for his release within seven days. The parents of the young man then informed the police about the kidnapping. The police said they tracked down the victim after they spotted the young man's car in Girona train station. "We observed two men open the car and then we arrested them," said the police. One of the men had keys to a flat in Girona, where he had lived for two years. The police entered the flat and discovered the victim tied by his feet to a radiator by chains. He also had his hands tied behind his back. The police confirmed that they also recovered the young mans car, his credit card and mobile telephone.

LEGIONNAIRES

Four cooling towers at Barcelona clinic marked as possible source Four cooling towers at the Delfos Clinic in Barcelona, that were not previously identified, have been targetted as the most likely root to the outbreak of Legionnaires' that has already affected 27 people in the neighbourhood of Vallcarca, a public health authority reported yesterday. According to Joan Guix, director of the Barcelona Public Health Agency, by testing water samples collected from cooling towers, scientists found that four of them were contaminated with the bacteria that causes Legionnaires' disease.

RUBBISH

Levels of garbage unchanged

The amount of rubbish generated by the residents of Barcelona did not decrease in 2003 compared to the previous year. Figures show that each person in the city was responsible for producing 1.44 kilos of rubbish each day in 2003, which was the same amount in 2002. The city accumulated 1,6611,481 tons of waste in 2003 which was an increase of 3.16 per cent compared to the year before. On the other hand, the efforts by Barcelona town hall to improve seperating different types of rubbish has shown an improvement by 33 per cent compared to 2002.

BLACK MARKET Police crack down on illegal CD and DVD sales in Barcelona

The Barcelona city police have confiscated some 213,000 CDs and 35,972 DVDs in the last six months in an effort to crack down on pirating and black market sales. On the trail of illegal film and music dealers Guàrdia Urbana police have picked a total close to four thousand people selling in Barcelona. The number of DVDs found is a significant leap from last year's figure, which did not reach the hundreds. In 2003, around 2,225 people were stopped on the street for selling CDs on the black market, and 146,466 discs were confiscated. This year the police have made over 14 arrests for illegal sales.

A modest homage to the highs and lows of an historic biking path

The green trail now used for bicycling and walking was once a little railway that has been forgotten since its demise under the dictatoriship

JOSEP BOSCH

Precious as human life is, sometimes a monument is even more valuable and can have far greater historical significance. Its destruction is even more regrettable.

I was pondering this recently while watching the reconstructed ancient bridge over the river Neretva in Mostar, in Bosnia Herzegovina, originally built in 1566. For centuries the bridge linked two different ethnic communities, the Croats and the Muslims of that former Yugoslav republic.

Its savage destruction in 1993 by the Croat army during the war was a symbol of hatred because it wanted to deny the possibility of harmony and unity between those two communities. On the other hand, the recently finished reconstruction, undertaken by the international community, through UNESCO and the World Bank, and celebrated by Croats and Muslims alike, was an important milestone in reconciliation in that part of the world.

The bridge was not only a major example of technological advance at the time of its construction, it made trade flourish, it united people, it was beautiful. It took many people many years to build. It took a single tank shell to finally destroy it. When it fell the world lost part of its heritage. But now people can cross it again.

Do I care more about a bridge than about thousands of people who died during that war? My point is that a bridge, its construction, its use, means more than one person. It represents many people, several generations, in fact.

THE BUDDHAS OF BAMIYAN

I also thought of the Buddhas of Bamiyan, the 1700-year-old carved sculptures in Central Afghanistan which were dynamited by the fanatic Taliban regime in March 2001 because they were considered idolatrous sculptures which offended Muslims.

Also in this case, the world did not care more about the destructed monument than about the suffering rilet, the railway line which once was people of Afghanistan as somebody said. But that monument had a special significance, and was painstakingly built over many years. Pilgrims went there to pray, it symbolised a culture, a religion, it was as though thousands of lives converged at that sacred space.

Its destruction, another example of fanatical hatred for symbols of other people's religion and culture was the beginning of the end of the Taliban regime. Fortunately there is now a plan to rebuild what was recklessly destroyed.

PEDALLING ALONG THE CARRILET

I had all this on my mind while leisurely pedalling the other day along the biking path which once was a small railway line spanning 40 kilometres from Girona to Sant Feliu de Guixols, in Central Costa Brava, a favourite biking and jogging trail for locals and tourists alike.

The railway line, "El Carrilet" (The little rail) as people used to call it, was built in 1892. At the time, it was a gigantic leap into the future, it took a lot of effort and meant a lot to people in the region. Families used the little train to visit friends, to go on excursions and occasionally to the beach in those days when this was an oddity. Significantly, merchandise was moving briskly in the new trade lines open from the coast to the interior, industries flourished, the economy was moving along.

The Carrilet became an impor-

Townspeople came from all over with tears and flowers to bid farewell to the last train to ever leave a station on the Carrilet line

tant part in the life of the community. When the railway line opened, the newspapers saluted the heroes of the day, the visionaries who made it possible and invested their money, their lives and in some cases their health in the project. Long live progress was the headline in the newspapers

Then, years later, when a dictatorial regime took hold of Spain and the political and economic decisions were taken in the capital, far away, with little regard for local concerns and sensitivities, the little Cara sign of progress and almost devotion by the local community, started its decline, unable and prevented from competing with more modern means of transportaition. There were unheeded plans to modernise: What about investing some money and building a fast line from Girona to Sant Feliu to free up traffic on the level of maintenance and care, by roads? How about modernising its infrastructure and links? Why not bring in electricity? No way.

The Carrilet died one cold evening in 1969, victim to the apathy and deafness of bureaucrats faraway if not as a punishment for unknown sins of people not so enthusiastic for the prevailing regime.

The last day, thousands of people from towns all along the line went to bid their final farewell to the Carrilet, some crying, some with their children, others with flowers. The little train was an old puffing machine which had earned the love of the people.

I remember the station master of one of the stations the last day picking up the telephone and telling the following station with a chilling matter-of-fact routine for the last time: El tren ha sortit (The train has departed).

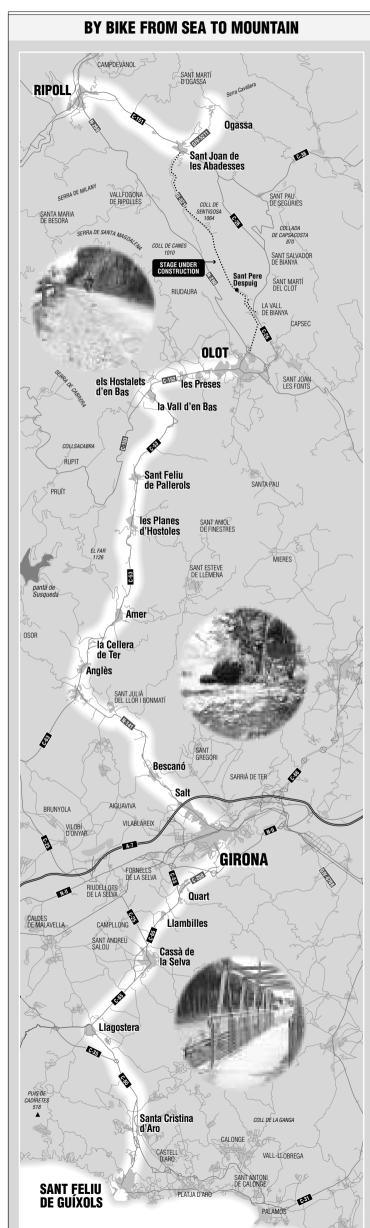

The following day the censored newspapers didnt even carry the news of El Carrilets demise. The dictatorial authorities were too embarrassed to even consider a justification for the crime. There was none.

Years later, when democracy came back and politicians were nearer to the concerns of the people and wanted to do things for them as opposed to trying only to perpetuate a hated regime, it was too late to rebuild the disappeared railway line. Instead, local governments along the line gathered together and decided to join efforts to use the path left by it to make a green route for bikers and joggers. This time the new democratic authorities in Madrid were also ready to chip in. And they did.

Now the old Carrilet line is a celebrated and busy path where people of all nationalities and ages enjoy a beautiful and gentle cycling ride or a promenade. It undergoes regular and reasonable maintenance and after almost ten years of use there are even improvements in some areas, more so at both ends than in the middle. Traffic safety remains to be a primary issue. Around Cassá de la Selva a little effort should be made to keep the path steady and properly signalled. Still, a major improvement would be to give the path absolute right of way except for few major road crossings.

Now its like the Carrilet lives again, its path, now without sleepers, without the puffing and weaselling of the old cracking steam engines and shaking cars, its again for people to enjoy. And as in the old Carrilet, strangers greet each other.

It would be a real shame if its both its users and by the authorities concerned, were not always at its best.

The Magnificent Seven and Far From Heaven amongst hit scores

14-times Oscar nominated Hollywood composer Elmer Bernstein dies

REUTERS

Elmer Bernstein, whose eclectic film music ranged from the rousing theme of The Magnificent Seven to the lighthearted Thoroughly Modern Millie, for which he won an Oscar, died on Wednesday, aged 82, at his home in California. Bernstein wrote more than 200 major film and television scores in a career that began in the 1950s. His last major score, a lush evocation of '50s melodrama, for Todd Hayne's Far From Heaven (2002) secured the last of his 14 Oscar nominations. His indelible theme for 1960's The Magnificent Seven is quoted in Michael Moore's Fahrenheit 9/11 and inevitably evokes a laugh of recognition from audiences. His last project was a documentary on Cecil B. DeMille in which he revisited his Ten Commandments' style and adapted some early silent film scores.

Bernstein's enormous range took him from the jazz-influenced The Man With the Golden Arm(1954), through sweeping epics like The Ten Commandments(1956), with all its biblical sound and fury, to intimate Americana like 1962's To Kill a Mockingbird,. His Western fare included John Wayne's last seven films, among them: True Grit and

Spanish population set to top the 50 million mark in next 25 years

MADELEINE SHEAHAN

Spain's population will exceed 50 million by 2025 and reach 53m by 2050. Projections by the National Institute of Statistics show a steady growth until after midway through the century, after which a process of decline will begin.

The Institute says the fundamental cause of Spain's democratic growth is immigration, which is also boosting the birth rate and is described as the "overwhelming feature" of population change. The Institute says that the relative youth of the immigrant population will go some way towards slowing the trend of an ageing population, but will not stop it. In fact, in coming decades, the proportion of over-65s will almost double, relative to the total population, from 16.8 per cent to 30.85% by 2050. Conversely the percentage of 0-15-year-olds will reduce from 15.6 in 2005 to 13.9 in 2070 and the percentage of 16 to 64-year-olds will drop from 67.6 to 57.8 in the same period.

The results show that, as the century advances, life expectancy will increase by four years for men and three for women and the birth rate will increase from 1.2 to 1.5 children year olds for the survey.

per woman. Life expectancy for men, 77 years in 2002, will reach 81 in 2030, while for women it will rise from 83 to 87 years.

Sex Habits

The Institute has carried out a separate survey which shows that less than half of all Catalan women, and under a fifth of the men, have had only one sexual partner in their lives. At the other end of the scale, 26 per cent of men, but only six per cent of women, claim to have had ten or more partners.

The survey on "Health and Sexual Habits" reveals a near equality between the sexes among those Catalans who have had three or four sexual partners, as is the case with 22 percent of men and 20 per cent of women. For residents of the Balaerics, this group shows no gender difference at all, with 16 per cent across the board falling into the category. They are also the most promiscuous population in Spain, with 39 percent of men and eight per cent of women laying claim to ten or more sexual partners, against a national average of 21 and four, respectively. She and her husband had come to Barcelona for a four day break. Judith admitted that they did not want to spend too much time away from their two teenage sons back in Leeds. "Visiting Barcelona was a cheap practical option for us. It gave us time to have a really pleasant break in a lovely city without having to spend too much time away from home," said Judith. It was their first holiday in Barcelona and neither were disappointed with the city."It really did live up to our expectations. The weather was perfect, such a change from rainy Leeds, and the food and culture was very good," they said. The Maritime museum topped their list of favourite places in the city, followed by the Sagrada city from Montjuic and a bus tour. However, David was very disappointed that he was unable to find a cafe that sold a decent cup of tea! They also had a bad experience with a street thief. " I nearly had my bag stolen outside the Sagrada Família. I was very lucky as I chased the thief down the street but he dropped the bag going into a metro station. I was so relieved as it contained our passports and money," said Judith. They found the many markets in the city a delight and spent several afternoons buying a selection of goods."We thought the variety in the markets was amazing and we bought garlic, nuts and peaches," said David. They said they would recommend Barcelona to their friends in Leeds but were not sure if they would return in the future.

They take several holidays each year. Their best memories are from the West Indies, Hong Kong and India. It was their first visit to Barcelona where they spent four days (10-13 August) indulging themselves in the culture. US forces have intensified their tough stance against Sadr's rebel militias as hopes for peace evaporate / AP

"Look at this hell" Najaf

Residents desperate for "any leader who can stop this destruction"

MICHAEL GEORGY in Najaf, Iraq

Residents of the bloodied city of Najaf want peace so badly that some will take any leader who can stabilise Iraq-even one hated across the Arab world.

"Give us anyone who can stop this destruction. We don't care who it is or where he comes from. We will even accept an Israeli, even (Prime Minister) Ariel Sharon," said Abdullah Sultan, an unemployed 50year-old resident of Najaf. "We are caught right in the middle of the fighting. Look at my neighbour's house. A mortar landed here. It must stop." Talk of Sharon leading Iraqis could get someone lynched in this fiercely anti-Israeli country. It shows just how desperate some have become. After two weeks of fighting between militiamen loyal to firebrand Shi'ite cleric Moqtada al-Sadr and U.S. marines, Najaf's people were doubtful that signs of a possible end to battles would silence menacing guns and mortars.

The conference which chose a national assembly said Sadr had agreed to government terms to end the crisis but both sides soon set conditions and U.S. officials talked of tough measures to stamp out Sadr's rebellion. In Baghdad, U.S. forces overran on Thursday the city's mainly Shi'ite suburb of Sadr City, a powerbase for the radical cleric, witnesses said.

In Najaf, fighting had continued overnight after the possible breakthrough was announced and snipers and artillery gunners began firing again on Thursday morning as a few Iraqis ventured out to the streets to test the mood.

When interim Prime Minister Iyad Allawi began heading Iraq's interim government in late June, Iraqis thought his background as a member of Saddam Hussein's toppled Baath Party would enable him to crush insurgents and criminals shaking the country. Aside from suicide bombings and kidnappings, he has yet to end Sadr's stubborn rebellion that is posing the biggest challenge yet to his government.

Confidence in Allawi was not felt along the battered alleyways of Najaf, a city that is sacred to millions of Shi'ites around the world and crucial for Iraq's stability as the centreof power for the country's majority sect.

Khayriyya Moulid, a tired elderly woman in a black veil, sat on a street littered with brick fragments hoping to sell a few cups of milk. Nobody was buying. "If God is willing he will help us," she said, pointing to the sky.

As a tense Najaf waited to see if Sadr's militiamen would give in to demands to leave the Imam Ali shrine they are holed up in, some Iraqis took refuge in hu cope with the uncertainty. "I have a satellite dish. When I see European countries I feel so sad for Iraq," said labourer Jassim Abboud, 47. "At least I have those channels now. In the old days we only had access to news coverage of Saddam and his family. They informed us when he was going to the bathroom."

Leukaemia risk grows 400% near gas stations

REUTERS

Living near a petrol station can quadruple the risk of acute leukaemia in children according to research published yesterday.

A study by French scientists, published in the Occupational and Environmental Magazine, found that a child whose home was near a petrol station or vehicle repair garage was four times as likely to develop leukaemia as a child whose home was further away. And the longer the child lived near the station, the higher the risk seemed to be.

Few clear risk factors have been identified in the childhood variant, but exposure to benzene in the workplace has been identified as a possible factor in leukaemia in adults, say the authors of the study.

The risk seemed to be even greater for acute non-lympoblastic leukaemia (cancer of a particular type of bone marrow cell), which was seven times more common among children living close to a petrol station or garage, the research showed.

A-levels up again but "no fall in standards"

A-level results are up again in the more of you have done well. This is UK and show that boys are starting to catch up with higher-achieving girls. The pass rate has crept up to 96 percent with 22.4 per cent of entrants receiving an A grade. Examiners, head teachers and education ministers were yesterday unanimous in rejecting claims that the 22nd consecutive improvement was the result of easier exams.

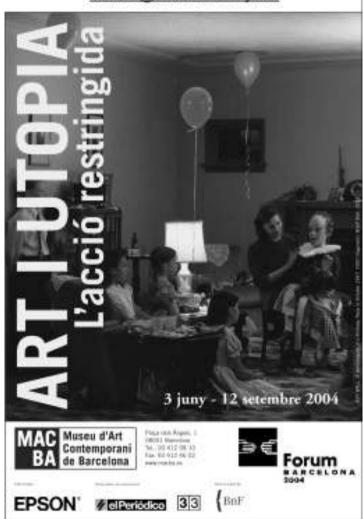

"Don't let anyone tell you that standards have dropped because simply a myth," Schools Standards minister, David Milliband, told BBC Radio 4's Today Programme. Milliband criticised the "national disease" of cynicism about improved exam results.

Better grades are forcing universities to look at new ways of distinguishing between the best. One idea is to get students to write an extended essay; another is to make individual scores available.

Lloret's summer demons tatements by the minister of the interior, Montserrat Tura, declaring that Lloret de Mar's problems were not about policing but due to "drunken tourism" have caused quite a stir and for the last two days has set the whole of the tourist sector on the warpath. It does seem at first glance that the minister's opinions are not only tough but also brave, especially as she has expressed them in the middle of high season and just when the sector is supposed to be rethinking its approach and getting its act together. Yet let's not kid ourselves, the minister is hardly saying anything new, and let's face it, finding a solution has been a priority for a while now for the local authorities and the Catalan govern ment. For more than ten years the Lloret town council - trapped between an excessive supply of hotel accommodation and its dependence on the big travel companies - has been trying to work out a different tourist model for the seaside resort. It seems that the most likely solution is to be found in quiet, behind-the-scenes work along with the consensus of all concerned and not through dramatic and theatrical public declarations of the type we've been hearing from all sides this week. The unfortunate spectacle of fighting in the media spotlight does little more than once more awaken the very same demons that appear every summer and that are never fully exorcised.

The most likely solution is to be found in quiet, behind the scenes work

Lloret is not the only point on the Catalan coast where this type of tourism can be found, and it is just not true that there's nothing to be done. Current legislation allows the closing, albeit temporarily, of those establishments that do not fulfil the law. What's more ,the local authority is also allowed some limited leeway in setting up its own control on the growth of tourism. What does not help the situation is the farce of the government blaming the hoteliers, the hoteliers blaming the agencies, and the agencies shrugging it off as the law of supply and demand. This is not to say it should be considered a taboo subject that cannot be discussed(although over the years it's quite possibly been talked about too much), simply that we should try to stop harping on without doing anything and act quickly (and on certain levels something is already being done). However, you can't help thinking that next summer the same subject will raise its ugly head once more.

Is this Barça the new dream team?

ith less than a fortnight to go before the minor distraction of the Olympics ends and the football season begins, there is an air of expectation in Barcelona that has been difficult to detect in recent seasons. Of course, there is always expectation - Barça always expects - but it was based more on faith than any belief that they were going to win anything. Four seasons without a trophy, not even a Copa de Catalunya, things could not go on like this.

Suddenly everything looks brighter, thanks largely to the election last year of Joan Laporta as club president. Laporta is a fan and a lawyer, Joan Gaspart, his predecessor was a fan and a businessman, and yet the two could hardly be more different. Gaspart was a disaster, a showoff and a spendthrift. He blew the millions he got from selling Luis Figo on a succession of overpriced under-achievers, most of whom Laporta has now disposed of and whose legacy lives on only in the form of enormous debt.

While Gaspart desperately wanted to be the man who discovered the next Maradona, Laporta - aided by his deputy Sandro Rossell - has been more circumspect. Yes he has bought Brazilians, but only ones that have a proven record in Europe and not some kid being talked up by

I work in an international company that has its offices in Catalonia and for the last few weeks I've been reading your newspaper. I find it interesting and very useful for people like myself. For this reason, I would like to make a suggestion that could improve your publication and help it to connect better with the readers. Barcelona waiters have to improve!

I share the opinions of tourists published in your newspaper about the attitude of Barcelona waiters towards foreign visitors. It would not be fair to generalise, as admittedly there are waiters who are perfectly professional. However, the truth is that the wonderful days I spent in your city were spoilt not a little by for myself, I would like to be able to rarely spoke much English. I believe Laura Pujol (Barcelona) that Barcelona waiters need to change their attitudes towards foreign visitors. Albert Egerton (Lancaster)

Peralada 2004 hailed a success

On the back of this season's record ticket sales, English National Ballet are to be given star-billing at next year's festival

The English National Ballet are set to bring their version of Puccini's Tosca to the Peralada festival next year according to its director, José Luis López de la Madrid. He was expressing his satisfaction at the success of this year's festival which over the last two months has attracted 30,000 spectators. The Festival Castell de Peralada near Girona, which has been running since 1987, this year sold out 60% of the performances which included orchestras, op- ance this season. eras and dance.

On the back of this year's success, the organisers are eager to bring in more top international acts such as the English National Ballet company: "We are keen to do Tosca. We'd really like bring over great singers and do this opera," said López de la Madrid. He also committed the festival to the challenge of continuing to mount their own productions after the success of the likes of Dalid-

In fact dance productions proved highly popular this summer, especially The Three Cornered Hat and El café de Chinitas which finished off the festival. According to López de la Madrid this last was, "the biggest show this year," and included backdrops and costumes by Dalí never before seen in Europe.

Among the musical acts, by far the biggest seller was Woody Allen and his New Orleans Jazz Band at

The festival also delivered in its commitment to staging operas with four major productions: Madame Butterfly, Janácek's The Makropulos Case, a departure with the National Opera House of Beijing's production The Goddess of Luo River, and

The Peralada festival takes place in the well-preserved village of the same name with it's castle and renaissance palace. The festival dating from 1987 holds events in the open air auditorium seating 1,550 or the gothic church that can accommodate 400 spectators. Member of the European Festival Association since 1992, the festival's main aim is to give support to Spanish performers.

Number of tourists goes up despite doubts about Costa Brava tourism

Catalonia has already reveived 7.2 million tourists in 2004, a 7.2% increase

Despite the war declared on the socalled booze tourism and the worries about the touristic model in Catalonia and Spain, the number of visitors has increased in the first seven months of 2004. Catalonia has had 7.2 million visitors until the end of July, a 7.2% increase in comparison to last year's figures. The average increase in Spain for the same period has been 4.1%, totalling 47.6 million visitors, according to the results of a survey on border touristic flow. Following Catalonia, the Spanish region with the highest visitor turnout was the Canary Islands, with 5.7 million people. However, in this case that figure represents a 5.7% decrease compared to the same period in 2003. In contrast, Madrid is the region with the most significant advance, with a 15.5% increase.

Of the total number of incoming people, 63% are tourists (i.e. people who spend at least one night in the country), Pedro Mejía, Spanish Junior Minister of Tourism and Commerce told a press conference. This figure represents a 1.9% increase in respect to the number of tourists that visited Spain between January and July in 2003. As for the revenues, "according to the last data released by Banco de España -Spain's central bank-, the turnover has gone up by 1.4% during the first five months of 2004, reaching 12.95 billion euros," stated Mejía. This data lead to the conclusion that "there is no downturn in tourism in Spain, but a time of doubt. There is definitely no crisis in the industry," headded.

As for the means of transportation used by the international tourists, 21.9 million arrived by plane, going up by 3.3%, mainly due to the traffic increase of low-fare airlines, which have experienced a 31.5% increment compared to 2003.

The golden eggs may be lost

Commerce Martínez Fraile criticised Catalan Interior Minister Monteserrat's insinuation that some Spanish could end up killing the goose that tourist resorts promote booze tourism, and that people come to Spain only to drink themselves into a stupor. during a press conference vesterday.

The Spanish secretary of Tourism and He said such statements were "exaggerated" and could harm the tourism sector. "Those kinds of statements laid the golden egg — they could be fatal for the tourism industry", he said

OIL PRICES New Irak violence spurs oil prices to new record high

Oil prices hit a fresh record yesterday, spurred higher by renewed violence in Iraq and fresh evidence that strong demand growth in China and India has not been slowed yet by higher energy costs. US light crude rose 53 cents to $47.80 a barrel, a new record, and London Brent gained 51 cents to $43.54 a barrel. US prices have set record peaks in all but one of the past 15 trading sessions and are up more than $10.50 a barrel, 28 percent, since the end of June. Attacks by Iraqi rebels saw mortars kill five at a Najaf police station and a domestic oil pipeline in the north blown up. Mortars also hit the Green Zone compound in Baghdad housing Iraq's interim government. Rising world oil demand has left little slack in the system to cope with outages in Iraq where Shi'ite militia have said they will target oil infrastructure if US forces do not leave the holy city of Najaf. Iraq's main southern pipeline from the Basra oilfields has been shut since a sabotage attack on Aug. 9, curbing export flows to about a million barrel daily, half normal rates, through a secondary line. "The situation in Basra is still deemed too dangerous to operate the line, although headquarter employees returned to work today and events in Najaf are encouraging," a South Oil Company official yesterday. Demand growth in emerging economies China and India has shaken up the oil market this year, intensifying competition for supply with established consuming giants such as the United States.

HOUSING

UK prices fall 2 per cent

House asking prices fell a non-seasonally adjusted 2 per cent in the five weeks to mid-August, property website Rightmove says, supporting a growing view that the market may now be cooling. Interest rates, which have risen 1.25 per centage points to 4.75 per cent since November, were blamed for pushing average asking prices down to 192,335 pounds on August 14 from 196,198 pounds on July 10. The residential property market is a key economic indicator in a country where twothirds of people own their home. "The Bank of England can't raise the cost of borrowing five times in nine months without something happening," Rightmove commercial director Miles Shipside said yesterday. "While it took much longer than people expected, it's now hitting the housing market at the sharp end-and asking prices have been declining in each of the last five weeks." The Bank of England, which in recent months had expressed concern about runaway house price inflation, last week said there were tentative signs of a slowdown, after a number of surveys pointed to this.

Spanish banking industry's first half profits increase by 28.4%

Giants BBVA and Grupo Santander account for bulk of positive results

EFE

Spanish banks registered net profits of 4.1 billion euros for the first half of the year, which represents an increase of 28.4 per cent over the same period in 2003, according to figures released yesterday by the Banking Association of Spain.

The positive results are due mostly to an increase in investment credit, cost control and a lessened need for resources for insolvency and amortisations. The industry's results were also bolstered by the weakness of the dollar and Latin American currencies relative to the euro, although less than in previous periods. Profits earned by the two Spanish giants BBAA and Grupo Santander, who earned a total of 3.3 billion euros, represented 79 per cent of the industry total.

The extraordinarily high 48 per cent growth in profits obtained by Santander most strongly affected the industry result. Intermediary profits were at 10.5 billion euros from January to June, an increase of 7.1 per cent over the first semester of 2003.

The strength of the industry is also reflected in an increase in incent, reaching a total of 5 billion euros. On the downside, the results for financial and foreign exchange operations decreased by 25.9 per cent.

The combination of these two figcome from commissions of 8.2 per ures produced ordinary profits of 16.3 billion euros, 5 per cent higher than the 15.5 billion euros earned in the same period last year.

Spanish banks were able to control their expenses in the first half of the year. Administration costs, including payroll and other expenses related to office operation, only increased by 2.1 per cent for a total of 7.7 billion euros.

Euro stocks fall as oil climbs high

• Oil at new record highs forced European shares to relinquish some of their gains on Thursday, but insurers, led by Zurich Financial helped equities stay in the black as the Swiss group's profits pleased. US oil prices struck a fresh all-time high of $47.96 a barrel, spurred higher by renewed violence in Iraq and the latest evidence that strong demand growth in China and India has not been slowed yet by higher energy costs. Oil prices are 28 percent higher since the end of June. Stocks such as car maker DaimlerChrysler and food giant Nestle were hit on concern sky-high crude prices would crimp consumption as well as raise production costs. "Oil is a big worry but prices will eventually go down as a little improvement, like maybe OPEC or Saudi Arabia using their remaining capacities, prompts speculators to move away from crude," said a strategist.

Dopingagain casts shadow over Olympics

Five weightlifters have been banned from competition after failing drugs tests

Five weightlifters were banned from being set in swimming and gymthe Olympics after failing drugs tests, officials said yesterday, as doping scandals continued to dominate the first week of the Games. Host nation Greece has already suffered a black eye over the antics of its two top sprinters who withdrew from the Games on Wednesday following a furor over missed dope tests.

Weightlifters from Morocco, Moldovia, Hungary, India and Turkey tested positive for performanceenhancing drugs and were expelled, distracting attention from arenas where exciting new standards were nastics.

No issue has generated as much heat at the Athens Games as drug use, especially after Greek sprinters Costas Kenteris and Katerina Thanou withdrew from the Games Wednesday amidst a controversy involving a missed drugs test.

Their withdrawal spared the International Olympic Committee (IOC) the duty of expelling them and further embarrassing the host nation, the land where the Olympic Games began 2,700 years ago and where they were revived in 1896.

Spain advances to playoffs Undefeated Spain became the first country to get an Olympic basketball playoff berth after coming from behind to defeat Italy 71-63. Spain (3-0) looked sluggish in the first half, but Catalan Pau Gasol (photo) and forward Jorge Garbajosa sparked a second-half run to overcome an eight-point deficit. Also, the US beat Australia 89-79 and New Zealand beat Serbia and Montenegro 90-87.

Badminton results

Ning Zhan of China won a gold medal victory in the women's badminton competition (individual) yesterday over silver medallist Mia Audina of the Netherlands. No less pleased was Mi Zhou (photo), who won the bronze for China. In men' doubles, reining Chinese champions Zhang Jun and Gao Ling beat Britons Nathan Robertson and Gail Emms for the gold medal.

Japan wins judo gold

Japan's gold medallist Noriko Annocelebrateshervictoryin the women's judo half heavy (under 78 kg) Olympic final yesterday. Anno defeated China's silver medallist Xai Liu. Anno managed to floor the 25-year-old Chinese competitor with 22 seconds to go. Japan has won six gold medals in judo so far, with one each for Belarus, China, Georgia, Germany, Greece and South Korea.

Beckham looks forward to reunion with England team mate Owen

REUTERS

David Beckham is relishing the proteam mate Michael Owen at Real Madrid. "I have enjoyed playing with Michael at an international level with England and now I am looking forward to having the chance of playing with him at a club level as well," Beckham told reporters after Wednesday's 3-0 win over Ukraine.

"I think that it will be very interesting. As I've said before, Michael could play in any league in the world with his pace and I don't think he'll have a problem in Spain. "On a personal level, I am very pleased with spect of linking up with his England my fitness levels and my fitness has been good throughout the pre-season with Real and I have really been enjoying it," the England captain added. Beckham enjoyed a return to form during the Ukraine match, scoring his first goal for England in open play in almost two years and setting up Owen for another. Manchester City's Shaun Wright-Phillips completed the scoring on his England debut.

Beckham said that the win had boosted the morale of the team following their quarter-final defeat on penalties to Portugal in Euro 2004. "I have always loved playing football but scoring goals always helps you," the midfielder said. "The win had to be a confidence booster for us because we were all very disappointed after the European Championships and we produced a good all round performance.

"But also the manager (Sven-Goran Eriksson) has said that he feels he has got together the best squad possible and that gives the players lots of confidence as well. "We needed this performance, the manager needed it, the players needed it and most of all the fans needed to see something like that."

Els Pets is at the moment one of the most representative bands of Catalan pop-rock. This vear they released their latest record Agost, which was received with great acclaim by critics and fans, has already sold more than 30,000 copies
