Adoptions of foreign children by Catalans double in three years

Adoption federation appeals for more government support for families

AGENCIES

More and more Catalans are adopting children abroad. Over the past three years the number of such adoptions has doubled, rising from 558 in 2000 to 1,042 in 2003, according to the Federation of Associations for Adoption (FADA). The federation, comprising 11 associations representing 5,000 families, expects the number will continue to grow, and believes around 1,400 children will be adopted abroad during 2004.

The demand from Catalan families for foreign children is growing apace; 2,111 people put in a request for this kind of adoption on 2002, but by 2003 the number has jumped to almost 3,000. The top countries for adopting children in 2003 were Russia (438) and China (223) where adoption formalities are speedier than elsewhere. 50 countries around the world currently allow foreigners to adopt their children. The most recent to join this list are Ethiopia, Nepal, Morocco and Mexico.

Catalonia's autonomous government, the Generalitat, must do more to help families who wish to adopt abroad, according to FADA. The biggest problem facing families is the lack of official information about how to go about it, says Anna Maria Osa, president of FADA.

 $This wo man in Arbucies in the province of Girona \ hopes to adopt two children from \ Haiti \ / \ LLU \'{i}SSERRATION ARBORATION ARBORDADO ARBOR$

Most people "end up coming to the federation or asking other parents," she says.

Catalan families also have to foot the bill for getting a certificate of suitability to adopt which costs 900 euros and takes six to eight months to obtain from private companies licensed by the authorities. Families in other autonomous communities do not have to pay for this service. Osa called on the Generalitat to give people the choice of paying to use a private service or going to a public sector one paid for by the taxpayer.

Adopting a child abroad is a big financial as well as emotional undertaking for the family. It usually costs between 7,000 euros and 12,000 euros, depending on the country of adoption. The Chinese authorities, for instance, ask adoptive parents to make a donation to the local orphanage of 3,000 euros.

PP attack coalition

The Partido Popular has criticised the three-party Catalan coalition government for rejecting all their budget amendments, which would have been financially benefical for the Lleida region. The PP minister for Lleida, Jordi Montanya, who submitted the amendments, accused the government of effectively "marginalising" the area of Lleida from its budgets.

Police arrest hit-and-run driver

Last Monday 5 July, an eighty-fiveyear-old woman was run over and left seriously injured by a hit-andrun accident in the town of Anglès. However, thanks to an investigation by Girona's traffic police, the vehicle involved in the accident was located and police have arrested the driver, who was a young man from Anglés. Meanwhile, the elderly woman is recovering from her injuries in the Josep Trueta hospital in Girona.

More industrial space for Lleida

Lleida's Chamber of Commerce and Industry has announced that one million square meters of private industrial land is to be made available in the capital of Segriá and the surrounding towns. At the same time, the Chamber has repeated its demand for more public industrial space, and is expecting to sign an agreement soon with Lleida City Council to create several new industrial estates. The lack of industrial space is one of the most serious concerns for both Lleida businesses and the Chamber of Commerce.

A network of 40 cities to continue the work set out in inter-religious parliament at Forum

The fourth Parliament of the World's Religions (PWR), celebrated from last Wednesday to Tuesday, has brought about the creation of a network linking together forty cities from around the world to work towards the objectives laid out during the dialogue, including the shortage of drinkable water, foreign debt, refugees and religious violence, according to the executive director of the Council for the PWR, minister, Ficca said he was "very satisfied" vesterday with the outcome of the past week of dialogue in Barcelona, which has led to interfaith work towards "a better world".

Some 8,400 people from 85 different countries — 30 per cent were from Spain according to Ficca and nearly one hundred cultural and religious communities participated in symposia, assemblies, dialogues and debates in and around the Forum building and convention centre. "No concrete solutions have come out of the Parliament," Ficca admits, adding that solving the world's problems "was not the intention." Ficca underscores that the importance of the fourth meeting was "more practical than profound". The aim was not to make a deep analysis on global issues, but rather that each community would pledge to commit simple acts in Dirk Ficca. Himself a Christian their own countries, Ficca says. One of the more promising moments of Tuesday night's closing ceremony was when teenagers announced their own commitment to bring the ideas of change that were discussed at the Parliament back to their home communities. "All the religions admit they are changing and recognise the importance of this change as something positive," UNESCO Centre director Félix Martí says.

Study reveals that Mediterranean culture lowers risk of heart death

A study has revealed that Mediterranean culture is a factor that helps lower the risk of dying from heart disease in Spain compared to English-speaking countries. Experts from the hospital of Sant Pau in Barcelona, claim that only 47% of sudden deaths in Spain are the result of heart disease, while in Englishspeaking countries this figure rises to between 80%-90%. According the head of the study, doctor Bayés de Luna, the reason for this difference is cultural."It is more than the Mediterranean diet and is due to the way people deal with life with optimism and happiness compared to the people in English-speaking countries," said doctor Bayés de Luna, who heads the research at the

More passengers and cargo checking into Catalonia airports

Barcelona, Girona and Reus have all registered higher numbers than past years

ALEX LEFF

The number of people checking in and out of airports in Catalonia is higher than in previous summer tourist seasons. Most of these tourists are from France and the UK, which had a considerable rise in recent months of 23.6 per cent. Over two million passengers passed through Barcelona's Prat airport last month, 7.7 per cent more than the same month in 2003. The amount of merchandise being handled on airport cargo belts has gone up as well, weighing in at a total of over 38 million kilos in the first two quarters of the financial year, which is an 11.8 per cent increase from Passenger traffic abounded even moreso in Girona, whose airport saw over one million fliers check in during the first six months of the year, a wopping 156.9 per cent increase from the year before, owing to the cheep-flight invasion. Bucking the trend, cargo usage actually went down by 3.8 per cent with a total of 53,490 kilos.

The airport in Reus has seen an increase in the number of passengers of 55.2 per cent in the first half of the financial year, reaching over 440,000 people. Over 175,000 people checked into Reus in June, which is 23.4 per cent more than the year before. Reus saw an increase in cargo transport in the past six months by 138 per cent. Last month cargo grossed at some 6,186 kilos, up by 138 per cent.

Prat has introduced two new routes for direct transcontinental flights this summer, Natal (Brazil) and Havana (Cuba), airport officials reported yesterday. Ryanair trying to do do away with luggage checking Passengers of the low-cost air carrier Ryanair who show up at Spanish airports with lots of baggage to be checked may soon be in for an unpleasant surprise. The airline yesterday announced measures to encourage passengers to travel with only carry-on baggage in a bid to lower cost and eliminate queues of passengers in the baggage claim areas of airports. And according to international reports, they may end up banning checked baggage altogether.

One new measure is an increase in the allowance for car $ry-on\,baggage\,from\,seven\,to\,ten\,kilos, while\,at\,the\,same\,time$ decreasing the allowance for checked baggage from 20 to 15 kilos. Another measure is raising the fee for excess checked luggage from 2.65 euros per kilo to 2.98 euros.

At a press conference called to announce the changes,

Alfons Claver, sales manager for the company in Spain, stressed that Ryanair has led "a revolution in the price of air travel in our country," citing the average price of a ticket with the company from May 2003 to May 2004 was 40 euros, and adding that "ticket prices may go even lower".

Measures similar to those taken in Spain are becoming widespread in other countries as well. Last week a company spokesman in London told the Financial Times that the company is mulling over the idea of doing away with the practice of loading baggage in the holds of it planes, meaning that passengers would be able to fly only with whatever items they are able to bring onboard the plane. According to CEO Michael O'Leary, such cost-cutting ideas are the result of recent disappointing results on the stock market.

Mandala to be dismantled

The world's largest mandala, located in a marquee at the end of the Rambles in Barcelona, will be ceremoniously dismantled today in accordance with Buddhist tradition. Sponsored by the Barcelona Tibet House as an offering to promote world peace, the mandala depicted the "wheel of time" with an intricate floor design created with coloured sand and measuring four metres in diameter. Thubten Wangchen, director of the Tibet House, expressed sadness at the mandala's passing, but reiterated that Buddhist philisophy "teaches one to accept that everything that is born must also die". A reflection on the "temporary nature of the things in this world" will form part of today's ritual dismantling of the mandala. After a session of meditation and prayer, a procession of Tibetan monks, together with any other interested individuals, will carry what is left of it to the port, where it will be thrown into the

Female staff can choose trousers

The Spanish rail company Renfe has decided to let female staff working on its AVE (high-speed) and long distance trains decide whether to wear uniforms with skirts of trousers. Female staff, whose uniforms have always included skirts, have been petitioning Renfe for the right to wear trousers should they wish to. Minister of Development Magdalena Álvarez had promised upon taking office that giving women this option would be one of her priorities. The change comes at a time when uniforms for these two services are being replaced for some 1,700 staff members, both male and female.

Flamenco offered at university

Students wishing to study flamenco as a university subject will soon be able to do so at the University of Cordoba. Augustín Gómez, a professor at that university, said that his objective was to make flamenco both a subject for university-level classes as well as a field to be researched. He said that establishing flamenco in universities was the best way to ensure its survival as a serious discipline, and that his plan was to eventually make flamenco into a "thematic nucleus" for other disciplines. He pointed out that courses about flamenco had already been offered at the Sorbonne University in Paris.

Ball used in Beckham's botched penalty shot worth 10 million

Spanish fan who caught ball in Portuguese stadium has put it up for auction on eBay

REUTERS

The ball that David Beckham blasted into the stands when he missed a penalty in England's Euro 2004 shootout defeat by Portugal has attracted a bid of over ten million euros on an Internet auction site. Beckham's wild spot-kick contributed to his side's quarter-final elimination, and collectors have decided it is worth battling for the ultimate memento of an error the England captain would much rather forget.

The Spanish football fan who claimed the trophy when it landed in his arms in Row Q of the Luz stadium in Lisbon decided to put the ball up for sale on the Spanish site of Internet auctioneers eBay (www.es.ebay.com) after a British newspaper offered to buy it for 18,000 euros. The ball, embossed with the names of the teams, the date and match venue, went on sale on Monday at a starting price of one euro but after 48 hours it had reached an astronomical ten million euros. Bids will be taken until 22 July and eBay says they can only be withdrawn in special circumstances.

Pablo Carral, a 25-year-old Deportivo La Coruña fan, admitted he could hardly believe his luck when the ball sailed into his hands. "The incredible thing was that the ball reached us because we were so far away from the goal," he said. "Two friends helped me get out of the stadium while I hid the ball under my clothes." Carral has been keeping the ball locked away in a safe pending its sale.

Princess Diana fountain runs dry for second time in a week

The Princess Diana Memorial Fountain in London has run dry due to a pump blocked by fallen leaves. The same problem caused flooding just after the fountain, located in Hyde Park, was inaugurated last week by Queen Elizabeth II. The structure has been controversial, not the least of all because of its 3.6 million-pound price tag. And two breakdowns in a week have left others with doubts about its feasibility. A representative of the company in charge of maintenance of the fountain said the problem was solved quickly. "It only took about two hours (to fix the breakdown)," he said. "We don't anticipate it happening again", he added.

The fountain is built around a large ring of granite from which water pours out in two direction into a large reflecting pool. The memorial fountain's unusual shape has won the praise of some for its stylishness, while others say it does not look stately enough to be the memorial for a princess.

Football clubs attend"terror summit" in UK

Thirty professional football clubs in Britain are meeting police and firefighters at a summit at Stoke City's Britannia stadium to discuss planning for a chemical, biological or nuclear attack, according to a BBC report. Among the clubs are Arsenal, Liverpool and Manchester City. Manchester United is not attending. There is no current threat but clubs are writing up a contingency plan and carrying out simulations to be ready for the possibility of an attack, which they see as real. "What you can do is have a plan that will deal with the possible problems that could arise," said Stoke City Council emergency planning consultant Malcolm Millichap.

Iraqi suicide bomb kills eleven as Mosul governor is assassinated

Tony Blair was "not responsible" for pre-war intelligence flaws, the Butler inquiry has found

REUTERS, BAGHDAD

A suspected suicide car bombing killed 11 people and wounded 40 on Wednesday in the first big guerrilla attack in Baghdad since an interim Iraqi government took over from the US-led occupiers on June 28. "This is naked aggression against the Iraqi people," said prime minister Iyad Allawi, standing by burned-out vehicles near a main entrance to the heavily defended "Green Zone" compound."We will bring these criminals to justice," he vowed, adding that seven Iraqi civilians and three National Guards had been killed and 40 people wounded. Later, gunmen killed the governor of the Iraqi city of Mosul, Osama Kashmoula, and two of his bodyguards, as they were travelling to Baghdad. The blast occurred hours after the news that Islamist militants led by Abu Musab al-Zarqawi had killed one of the two Bulgarian truck drivers held hostage in Iraq. They vowed to kill the second within 24 hours unless US-led forces freed prisoners. Bulgarian government officials, who described news of the deaths as "shattering" would not disclose which of the two truck drivers, Georgi Lazov, 30, or Ivailo Kepov, 32, had been killed.

Britain's pre-war intelligence on Iraq's armaments had "serious flaws" but Prime Minister Tony Blair was not personally responsible, an inquiry found on Wednesday. "No single individual was to blame. This was a collective operation," Lord Butler told reporters after releasing a report that also said Saddam Hussein had no significant banned weapons ready for use prior to the US-UK invasion.

His findings mirrored last week's Senate committee report that lambasted US intelligence services for exaggerating the threat from Iraq, but found no sign President Bush had pressured analysts to reach preset conclusions. Wednesday's longawaited report by former top British civil servant Lord Butler concluded that Iraq "did not have significant-if any - stocks of chemical or biological weapons in a state fit for deployment nor developed plans for using them." The government's Joint Intelligence Committee (JIC) strove to put together a dossier on Iraq's weaponry in 2002 reflecting available intelligence.

Delegates were also told that the increase of Aids amongst women was the result of discrimination, poverty, the difficulties of gender and violence suffered by them in many parts of the world. Of the 38 million people infected with the virus, 17 million are women,

The conference was told that A conference has been told that near- the situation in countries of sub-saly half of the world's Aids victims are haran Africa was alarming, as more women than men have been infected with the virus. Doctors at the conferece also revealed that children with Aids are missing out on treatment because of a shortage of specially-designed drugs. They pointed out that the lack of a profitable market meant that custom-made drugs for children were in short supply, as most of the children suffering from Aids live in poorer countries.

Swastika attack woman made up the story, say police sources

A French woman who claimed she had been the victim of an anti-Semetic attack, made up the story according to police sources in Paris. The 23-year-old woman alleged that six men had attacked her on a train in the suburbs of Paris, drawing swastikas on her body and accusing her of being Jewish, said the BBC. Police sources say the woman has admitted inventing the story and that she drew the swastikas with the help of her boyfriend. This follows the study of video tape from surveillance cameras at the train station where the six alleged attackers were supposed to have left the train, but investigators have found no evidence to support this claim from the footage. French media report that the young woman has filed several complaints in the past about being the victim of violence. The alleged attack on the woman provoked anger and adds to concerns about racist and anti-Semitic attacks in the country. The woman and her boyfriend are now in police custody.

First lady will not be candidate for top post

Marta Sahagún, the high-profile wife of the Mexican president, has said she will not be standing as a candidate in the country's 2006 presidential elections. This puts to an end months of speculation about her political future. "Mexico is ready to be governed by a woman, but I don't want to be a candidate for the president of the republic," she said. The current president Vicente Fox is set to stand down once his term of office expires in 2006. Her critics had accused her of using a private foundation called "Vamos Mexico" as a means to further her political career. She indicated that after her husband leaves his post, they will retire. "We will both go home and enjoy family life," she said.

Does Islam need positive discrimination?

f you can't beat them, join them," runs the popular saying. Is this about to happen to us? What surprises me is the recent manoeuvering of justice minister, López Aguilar in referring to certain concessions to islamists, such as the advisability of teaching Islam in schools. His words reveal an unusual liberality when contrasted with the typical attitudes to the teaching of religion (Catholic in other words) in schools. Zapatero, meanwhile, called for, "more gym and less religion." Can they feel so uncomfortable with what Catholics in Spain may think, believe or say? I have never thought it correct to deny anyone their rights to worship but heaven forbid Christians openly preaching in Arabia. In the Islamic world these rights are denied. Resorting to legislation is unnecessary; one merely has to observe the pronouncements of the Koran in relation to the "infidel".

Nevertheless, our traditional democratic sense of individual freedom has opened up the door to a process of Islamicisation. Salvador Puig, director general of production, innovation and agri-food Industries of the Catalan government appeals to private initiative in facing the challenge from a European market of, "almost 35 million Muslims," being provided with food produced according to the codes of the Halal Institute in Andalusia. In Catalonia, the Catalan Government appears well-disposed to doing whatever is called for in encouraging the integration of the Muslim community among us. There is little doubt that our respect for other cultures will keep us from subjecting a mosque to such disagreeable action as that seen in the cathedral of Barcelona some weeks back, where the lack of respect in a sacred place was remarkable. It is something not to be forgotten when the imams reassert their rights to raise mosques here. This controversy has already been seen in the Maresme last summer and is being repeated in Seville, where the city council have provided prime land of 6,000 square metres to build a mosque and cultural centre, and possibly a school of international Islamic studies. Why are Christians not allowed to do the same in Islamic lands?

Nobody seems to have realised what is really happening in Europe, Spain and Catalonia. A recent study by the academic Victor Pérez Díaz - Muslim Immigration in Europe warns of the negative experiences in Germany, France and other countries. The experts are surprised that it is the second generation of immigrants who show the strongest rejection of the adopted culture. It is in fact logical: they have less to be grateful for in having been born in situ and they suffer the impositions placed on them by their social group when adapting to the new culture. Just look at the crisis of the headscarves in French schools, for example. A recent police report published in Le Monde warns of signs of "community withdrawal" in 300 neighbourhoods, revealing an increasing problem of integration. The solution provided by the new law for religious teaching has provoked a group of imams in Lyon to look into the possibility of them providing teaching for Muslim girls in Catholic schools. The problem is deeper than a simple conflict with secularisation - these groups question the very values of modern Western society. In París, for example, I was told by Edgar Pisani, president of the Islamic Centre of Paris when we were at a Nato meeting: "It is you and your dubious morality that creates the rejection of the West by Muslim youth."

Female teachers in our schools are beginning to experience a lack of respect from certain Muslim boys. According to Pérez Díaz's study, many Moroccan adolescents, "feel superior to them (female teachers) and they question their authority with acts of defiance." It would not be a bad idea if Catalonia, which is so open to other cultures that settle here, began to seriously decide on either integration or positive discrimination.

The "Saló Immobiliari i de la Construcció" is to take place between 25 and 27 February 2005

RICHARD MCCRANN

The Fira de Lleida is expanding to include for the first time a trade fair for property and building sectors in a bid to highlight their growth in the region of Ponent. The new fair is seen as a major development for the Fira de Lleida and is a bid to improve its results and avoid losses for the organisers. The expansion of the trade show is the result of a study, led by Xavier Roca, to see how it could incorporate new stands. The property section will promote new and older homes, second residencies, industrial factories and land and offices. The organisers of the trade show want to obtain the maximum involvement from private companies. public bodies and professionals from the construction sector to guarantee its success.

The manager of the trade show explained that the idea to create a fair of this kind came from the decoration stand, which had a construction part, along with the vitality that the buliding sector has been enjoying in Lleida. Most of the companies to participate in the trade show are local-owned, but in many instances they work in other regions, Roca points out. The property and building fair will take place in the pavillions 3 and 4 of the Fira de

Consolidation of supermarkets

The chains Carrefour, Caprabo and Candis represent nearly half of all supermarket retail trade, according to a report on corporate consolidation in the retail sector in Catalonia. The findings were based on a studfrmade in 2002 but only now made available to the public. Consolidation occurs more in other places including the Basque Country (71%), Valencia (62%) and Madrid (51%). However, the first major commercial food providers in the Basque Country and Valencia, such as Eroski and Mercadona, are locally-owned. Carrefour is French-owned, a cause for concern for Catalan minister of Trade, Tourism and Consumer Affairs, Pere Esteve./M.B.

Governmenttoopen 17 trade offices abroad

Speaking yesterday at Reus, Pere Esteve, the Catalan government minister for Trade and Tourism, announced the government's new business plan, which is called Platformas Empresarials de Catalunya and involves the creation of 17 offices around the world for the use of Catalan businesses interested in breaking into markets outside the EU. Esteve said that these offices will be opened between 2004 and 2006.

The aim of this project is to facilitate the process of internationalisation for Catalan companies though, as Esteve pointed out, "it will not only be for the purposes of export but also to help Catalan businesses establish themselves abroad, to develop and gain importance in these new markets. To date, the Catalan government has set up offices in Mexico, Miami and Casablanca, and by the end of this year, Beijing,

Saudi prince encourages growth of tourism

Saudi Prince Salman bin Abd al-Aziz took advantage of his visit to Barcelona's forum to to promote his country as a first-class destination for cultural tourism. The prince, speaking at the dialogue "Tourism, cultural diversity and sustainable development", played down the problems created by Islamic Terrorism and spoke of a project that the Saudi government is undertaking to boost tourism in the Arabian Peninsula, which has a similar land area to that of Western Europe. "We are restructuring the tourism industry since it is one that can make a significant contribution to our economy," he said, adding that it is vitally important for Saudi Arabia to make the country's cultural diversity known to the rest of the world. He emphasised the warmth and hospitality that Saudis show to foreign visitors "in spite of the reputation that it has in the mass media". The prince stressed that his country is modern and the "the most developed country in the region".

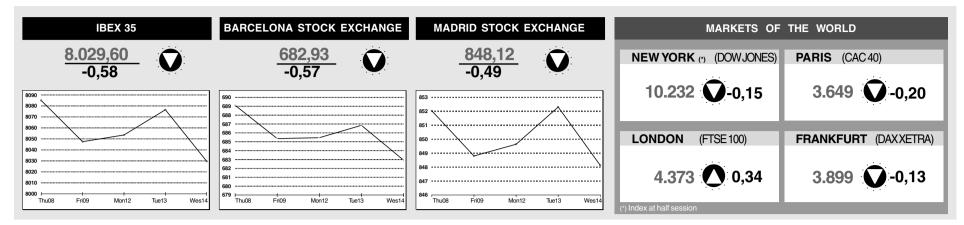

Travel agencies claim up to 5 per cent increase in summer travel

Package holiday sales have gone up this summer between four and five per cent compared to last year, according to Spanish travel agencies association head Jesús Martínez Millán. However, it is difficult to predict exactly how the season will close, considering the growing trend in last-minute travel, he added. More and more travel packages are popping up, Martínez points out, and there may even be an excess of them. This has occurred in tourist destinations such as the Caribbean, where deals have grown in abundance by 40 and 50 per cent compared to last year, despite all the last-minute planning.

Euro stocks decline on Intel news

• Euro stocks declined, led by chipmakers including Infineon Technologies AG and Royal Philips Electronics NV, after Intel Corp, said profitability this year may be lower than earlier forecast. The Dow Jones Stoxx 50 Index slipped 0.1% to 2638.6 while the Euro Stoxx 50, a benchmark for the 12 countries using the euro, dropped 0.3%. Intel comments raised concerns that corporate profit growth may slow more than some analysts have predicted. US stocks tumbled sharply to the Intel news. Infineon, Europe's second biggest chipmaker, declined 1.9% to 9.62 euros, while Philips slipped 1.9% to 20.93 euros. Intel shares slumped 8.3%. "Intel is a bellweather for the industry and an indication as to where the economy is going," said Roger Hornett, from Theodoor Gilissen Securities in London. Euro stocks dipped after government report about US retail sales.

BBC orders inquiry after viewers complain about drop in quality

 $Spotlight on BBC1\ controller\ as\ governors\ question\ balance\ of\ peak\ time\ output$

AGENCIES

The BBC's board of governors has ordered an independent review of BBC1 amid falling approval ratings and questions over the future of the channel's controller, Lorraine Heggessey. The corporation's annual report, published yesterday, said the study would "assess whether or not the channel has the best balance of output in peak time". In particular, it questioned whether BBC1 had achieved the ideal combination of innovative and mainstream broadcasting.

Under Greg Dyke, the BBC's last director general, BBC1 became more commercially competitive, moving the news to 10pm and Panorama out of peak time. Shows such as Casualty and Holby City were extended to run for much of the year, and there was a narrowing of the range of programmes screened by the channel. The corporation yesterday denied any "crisis" at BBC1, saying the review would be the first of many into its services. But the governors' report adds: "Audiences' perceptions that the quality of BBC television is declining are worrying, and we need to do more to understand this better."

The BBC's revealed last month that approval ratings for BBC1 fell to their lowest level in April, and it is understood that the decline has continued. The governors last ordered a review of BBC1 four years ago; shortly afterwards, the then controller, Peter Salmon, was moved to become the director of sport. Mark Thompson, the BBC's director general, was asked yesterday whether the latest concerns about BBC1 meant it was time for Ms Heggessey, who was appointed by Dyke, to be replaced. He replied that Ms Heggessey had taken action to improve the public service performance of BBC1 and pointed out that the governors found much to praise about the channel. But Thompson stopped short of ruling out any management changes, and there is speculation that he will want to impose his authority on the corporation with an executive reshuffle soon. Thompson said that "over time all services will be subject to this review". But he insisted that "there's not any kind of concern about BBC1". "The governors believe BBC1 is getting stronger in terms of public service delivery in many ways," he said.

Diamond firm De Beers | Giant Tesco opens settles price-fix charge and moves in on US

ALEX LEFF

The lucrative US diamond market has fully opened up to De Beers after the resolution of a price-fixing case, according to the BBC. The company, which is a leader in the diamond trade, pleaded guilty on Tuesday to conspiring to fix industrial diamond prices in 1991 and 1992 and agreed to pay a 10 million dollar fine. The settlement means De Beers operations will now work directly within the US. Until now the firm has had to use intermediaries in the US. De Beers faced its first charge of price fixing just after World War II. The US industrial diamonds market is worth an estimated 500 million dollars. "That's a pretty big market to give up and not be actively involved in," anti-trust lawyer John Majorastold the BBC. The company was happy to have the case resolved according to its general cousel. Prosecution of De Beers has been difficult as US officials have no jur isdiction over the South Africabased company.

The guilty plea reflects the department's persistence in the fight against illegal price fixing," R. Hewitt Pate, assistant attorney general for the Department of Justice in Washington told the BBC. General Electric (GE), one of the world's biggest companies, was also charged but was then dismissed because, according to US district attorney George Smith, the government had failed to prove its case. The United States makes up nearly half of the worldwide diamond market which is currently valued at around 30 bil-

Supermarket giant Tesco managed to get a foothold in China with the purchase of a fifty per cent stake in a 25-strong hypermarket chain for 140 million pounds (around 210 million euros), according to the BBC. The foray into the Ting Hsine chain ends a three-year search for a venture partner in the Chinese market. Tesco currently has stakes in twelve countries, including Hungary, Poland, South Korea, Taiwan and Japan. "China is one of the largest economies in the world with tremendous forecast growth," Tesco's Sir Terry Leahy told BBC. Ting Hsing is the largest food supplier in the country and is owner of the Hymall supermarket chain, now halfowned by Tesco. Hymall started out in September 1998 and is one of the

Marks & Spencers bout heats up

The biggest shareholder in British retail icon Marks & Spencer pressured the company's board yesterday to enter talks with suitor Philip Green as it braces for a colourful and vocal annual general meeting. Brandes Investment Partners, which holds 11.7 percent of Britain's top clothing retailer, said in a statement it would be in the shareholders' interests for M&S Chief Executive Stuart Rose to talk to billionaire tycoon Green. Brandes, which has given its support for Green's 9.1 billion pound bid, said it had not been convinced by Rose's recovery plan, outlined to investors on Monday.

NY Times earnings up slightly

The New York Times Co yesterday reported a slightly higher quarterly profit but said it would need additional cost control measures to meet 2004 targets amid slower advertising revenue growth. The company, publisher of the New York Times and Boston Globe newspapers, said second-quarter earnings rose to $75.5 million, or 47 cents per share a year ago. Revenue grew to $823.9 million from $801.9 million a year earlier. Advertising revenue rose 3.9 percent, while circulation revenue remained flat from a year ago, the New York Times Co said. Analysts had on average forecast earnings per share of 49 cents with revenue of $839.6 million.

Asian hotels get tech-savvy

At first glance, Le Meridien in Hong Kong's high-tech Cyberport complex looks much like any other in a recent crop of hotels catering to the upwardly mobile. But out of sight of the hotel's modern furniture and softly glowing fixtures are no fewer than five wireless and wired networks, allowing guests to check in, take room calls, surf the Web and print documents from anywhere on the property. Asia is helped by having many small, high-end hotel chains often controlled by one or two major shareholders who can easily push through high-tech addons costing millions of euros. Asian hoteliers said time will tell if travelers embrace the latest electronic gadgets and services.

Music labels losing file-share war

Rogue exchanges continue to dwarf the nascent market for legitimate music download services by programmes such as Apple Computer's iTunes. The popularity of file-sharing is costing the largest Internet service providers $10 million per year each in bandwidth and network maintenance costs, according to England-based technology firm CacheLogic. "One of the biggest myths put forth by the music industry — that they are winning the war on filesharing — is simply wrong," Andrew Parker, co-founder of Cache-Logic told Reuters. "It's a case of displacement," he added, "users are just moving to new networks." File sharing has doubled in the past year.

While Catalan architect Enric Miralles' ambitious design for the Scottish Parliament Building has delighted many people in Scotland, the spiralling costs have not / SCOTTISH PARLIAMENTARY CORPORATE BODY

Scotland's Sagrada Familia?

Since work on the project began in 2000, costs have skyrocketed to an amount that is ten times the original budget

XSOLANO/M BUNN

Ever since the necessary architectural technology came into existence, mankind started building big and tall; from the pyramids of Egypt to Europe's medieval cathedrals to the skyscrapers of Hong Kong, successive generations have attempted to express their social and national identity through enormous buildings and, invariably, many of these projects fell victim to wildly exceeding their budgets or failing to meet the expected finishing date.

Edinburgh's new Scottish Parliament Building, designed by the Catalan Enric Miralles, is a perfect example of an ambitious monolith of a building which, owing to a multitude of unforeseen events (not least the fact that the architect died weeks come mired in controversy.

It all started when Donald Dewar, the First Minister of Scotland and the brain of the country's ongoing devolution process, decided that something special was needed to herald the renaissance of Scotland he got it. The choice of a Catalan architect for the project was no accident, as Catalonia is considered by many Scots to be one of the most important models in terms of the political devolution process.

Unfortunately, this idealistic project was hit by an endless series of problems no sooner than it had commenced, causing the original budget to become a mere fond memory. Since construction started

10 million pounds has skyrocketed to over 430 million. Meanwhile, three years after the agreed finishing date, over 1,000 builders are still swarming over the building, frantically trying to to complete it in time for parliament to move in over sumpolitics, and Miralles made sure that mer, as well as for the royal opening in October. The staggering expense and delay has provoked fury and outrage in Scotland, and in the search for someone to blame, Lord Fraser was commissioned to carry out an inquiry that will be published this September, just one month before Queen Elizabeth opens the building. However, Lord Fraser and his committee have long known that the fiasco cannot be blamed on one person alone - the project has seen after construction started) has be- in June 2000, the original budget of too many errors of judgment by too many people, as no less than 15,000 modifications have been made to the original design, while an extra 3,000 square metres of space have been requisitioned for the site. Further problems have derived from the complexity of the construction (and the impossiblity of discussing any design problems with the original architect) and the death of Donald Dewar, whose brainchild the building was.

Meanwhile, the debate continues as to whether this building - no matter how beautiful and innovative it might be - is worth almost 500 million pounds. Opponents say that given Scotland's lack of resources in such areas as health and education, it is decidedly not. But on the other hand, say the building's defenders, if social and economic problems had always been given priority through history, then today we would probably have no pyramids, fewer beautiful cathedrals, and a low-rise Hong Kong. The financial outlay might be immense, but that tends to be forgotten with time, leaving a deep pride amongst city dwellers for their famous buildings, as the inhabitants of Zaragoza feel for their La Pilar cathedral, or Sydnev inhabitants do for their opera house. "Now I don't have to go to Barcelona any more", a Scottish MP said recently, "now we have our own Sagrada Familia". But was he referring to the beauty of Miralles' design, or to the fact that nobody knows when it will be completed?

Jilted Patrick Kluivert unable to attract any wealthy English suitors

The problem is that the Dutchman has an inflated idea of his value

MICHAEL BUNN

Patrick Kluivert's inevitable departure from Barça is showing no signs of becoming any less protracted or messy. The Dutch striker has long said that he wants to move to an English club, but when the big three - Manchester United, Arsenal and Chelsea - signally failed to drop everything and rush over to talk to him, Kluivert's approach has been to lower his sights, though not his income bracket.

Newcastle and Bolton are both keen on him, but he is refusing to accept anything less than his current Barcelona wage of 120,000 euros a week. Newcastle have offered half this amount and Kluivert took this as a personal insult. But perhaps Patrick should open his eyes and realize that there are many who do not believe that he is worth so much.

The problem with Kluivert is the huge chasm between what you see and what you get. What you see is an athlete of immense energy, commitment and elegance, a player with a light touch who can score beautiful goals. However, it is the ones he misses that stick in the memory, the countless sitters whacked high and wide. When Barça go for their twicea-season romp and flatten some opponent 6-0, Kluivert will be in there with a hat trick. But when it is 0-0 after 75 minutes and he has a free shot on goal, he inevitably falls over his feet or blasts it into the crowd.

This last year has been particularly trying for him, as though he scored Barça's opening goal in their victory against Madrid, that was the goalscoring highlight of his year. Things got so desperate that he even learned Catalan in an attempt to ingratiate himself with the Culés, but it was a case of too little, too late. The

Kluivert rues another missed chance - though this time it is for his national side / EPA

Barça management want rid of him because he costs too much, while Barça supporters are notoriously impatient with lost causes.

Another Barça player who is currently moving inexorably towards the exit door is Javier Saviola. The Argentinean also has contractual problems, though he has refused to renegotiate his payments. As a player he has also proved disappointing over the past three years. He has Kluivert's problem of rarely scoring when it really matters, merely adding a couple of goals when the team are romping home 5-0. When he first arrived at Barça, everyone was hoping that he would be a nippy little striker in the style of Michael Owen, who could turn quickly and lose his markers with ease; in the event, he is fast and fairly accurate, but he fails to use his size to his advantage - quite the opposite, in fact, and many's the game in which he has been marked into invisibility. Coach Frank Rijkaard is known to favour bigger strikers who can fight for space in the area, and it remains to be seen whether Ranieri's interest in Saviola joining Valencia will solve Barça's problems.

An inspired and rejuvenated Richard Virenque snatched his annual Tour de France stage in the longest ride in this year's race between Limoges and St Flour Wednesday. The most popular and most controversial cyclist in France won the 147.3mile 10th stage on Bastille Day to claim back the King of the Mountains jersey he has already won six times. It was a dominating performance by Virenque, who came across the line to wild applause morethan five minutes ahead of his nearest challengers Andreas Kleoden and Erik Zabel, both of Germany.

The Quick Step team leader, kicked out of the Tour in 1998 because of the Festina doping scandal, has now won seven mountain stages in seven different Tours and is ideally placed to win a record seventh polka-dot jersey. The national day celebrations were perfect for local fans as young Frenchman Thomas Voeckler stayed with the Tour favorites and retained his overall leader's yellow jersey. Five times Tour champion Lance Armstrong had warned that he would be riding conservatively in the first really tough stage in this Tour and he kept to his word to remain well-placed in sixth.

British company Ladbrokes are among four major firms to make Ernie Els favorite at 6-1 or 13-2 to win the British Open which starts at Royal Troon on Thursday.
